SATURDAY, NOV. 10, 1900. CHAMBERLAIN'S IMPERIALISM. The greatest personal and political triumph of modern times is that which has been achieved by Joseph Chamberlain in the recent British elections.

to which he has by sheer force of his personality committed the Tory administration and party is in many of its aspects far removed above the traditions of conservatism which has won for that party its political ascendency.

The policy of negotiation has no place in the programme of this wonderful politician. Beginning with his splendid work as mayor of Sheffield, he has gone on, urging upon the nation such policies as tended to enlarge the scope of governmental responsibility. At times, in many of his projects, he has come dangerously near to the line of state socialism. He has broken down the great national policy of free trade, at least to the extent that in his colonial policy he has fairly outlined the thought of imperialist protection against the world.

Political consolidation has thriven under his direction as it never did before. His all-embracing policy has brought all the colonies, save New Zealand and Newfoundland, within the aegis of imperial confederation as a force of the future. Nowhere does that policy seem to receive a challenge save from the direction of the great empire of Russia, and even there the possibility of a class of imperial interests is now, apparently at least, too remote to engage the thought of serious international statesmanship.

As an agency for the advancement of foreign trade it is easy to understand the value of Mr. Chamberlain's policy. Whether we ourselves are destined to follow in the same courses the immediate future must determine. Whatever that future may hold in this direction it is beyond serious question that the nation which seeks to contest strongly for the trade of the world must rely to some considerable extent on its territorial influence outside its own immediate boundaries.

FALSE DEMOCRATIC DOCTRINE. It is a distinguishing feature of Democratic social and political creed that all men are alike before the law. It has never until recently been put forward as an expression of Democratic faith that the rich man deserved and should receive any less consideration of his rights and privileges than any other man.

If there is one characteristic of American life more marked than another it is that all men are permitted to pursue their own gain in every way which their enterprise and ingenuity may dictate, consistent with the rights of others, and are permitted to enjoy the fruits of their own industry in their own way, and free from the interference of governmental power.

It is, of course, sheer demagogism. But it has passed for Democracy. And it still passes as such with a number of passionate mortals who happen to be awry in their notions of social right. It is not Democracy; it is the very opposite of Democracy. It would set a pall on the efforts of men to become well-to-do; it would paralyze individual energy; and it would inevitably result in transforming the face of the society in which it prevailed into an oligarchy pure and simple.

It is true that wealth and power often succeed in securing many public privileges at the expense of the commonwealth. But the fact that such is the case is not to be advanced as a reason why limitations should be placed on the legitimate accumulation of individual wealth. The Democratic party in its very essence, and in all the policies with which it has been identified since the foundation of this government, has stood the unwavering foe of special privilege.

"You Never Saw the Like" is the title of a little four-act comedy piece by the Commercial club, of St. Paul, which shows at a glance the many advantages of the capital city of Minnesota. It is a play of right size to include in an envelope, and thousands of copies of it should be sent away by our citizens to their friends in other parts of the country.

Our winter is coming on just as the cold weather ends in Southern latitudes. The grass is again growing on the South African veldt, and the Boers can travel once more without carrying fozage for their horses. Conditions again favor the peculiar tactics of the belligerent burghers, and news of trouble may be expected regularly for some time.

one rule of treatment, more or less favorable, for the rich and another for the poor. Equal rights for all and special privileges for none, whether rich or poor, is of itself the essence of true Democratic teaching.

The delay which has prevailed in the execution of some concerted policy by the powers in China has naturally given rise to the belief that there is something in reserve which may change materially the arrangements which seemed so nearly complete looking toward the withdrawal of foreign arms from the empire and the restoration of normal conditions.

There is no common ground for the Philippine question against American authority and for the revival of the colonies from King George's—Portland Oregon. Why not? The Filipino is asserted himself against the American colonist.

Under all these circumstances, and in view of the future policy of the United States toward the Chinese people and their government, it seems eminently proper that we should avoid being involved in any of the proceedings which may be decided upon outside the lines of national concern to which we have given our adhesion.

AT THE THEATERS.

THEODORE THOMAS' ORCHESTRA. The reposerful Mr. Thomas and his sixty or so famed musicians presented an orchestral program last evening at the People's church that was as noticeable for its well selected variety as for its excellence of treatment.

The arrangement of last night's programme was especially commendable. There was variety—an abundance of it—and yet the numbers were climacteric in effect. Climax was not attained, however, by any increase in the quality of excellence so far as the playing was concerned. There was nothing to cavil at in the playing of the overture to Mozart's "Mago Flauto" even though it was more to commend in the concluding rhapsody by Lalo.

From the Beethoven symphony, "Eroica" were played two movements, Allegro Con Bravura and the second movement, less emotional, more masculine in the character of the Chopin march, was given a fine reading. Almost too sharply contrasted with it came two Hungarian dances by Brahms. The composer here caught in these two fanciful bits of melody the very spirit of the dance.

"A Runaway Girl," with Arthur Dunn and a big company of clever people, will close a successful engagement at the Metropolitan opera house with two performances today, matinee and evening, and the farewell performance to-night.

"The Princess Chic," the latest comic opera success, with Margaretta and the star of a splendid company, will begin an engagement of four nights and Wednesday matinee at the Metropolitan opera house.

"The High Rollers" entertained two more large audiences at the Star yesterday afternoon, the burlesque and specialty performances being highly enjoyed.

(Advertisers are reminded that the respective circulations of the week-day and Sunday Globe are largely separate propositions, that of the Sunday being smaller in the rural parts than the week-day edition, and larger in St. Paul and near-by cities and towns.)

The Globe's circulation statement is not accompanied by an affidavit, and for the reason that few advertisers do not realize that any person who will make a willfully fraudulent statement will scarcely scruple to swear to its accuracy.

Instead of parading an affidavit, the Globe invites any one and every one interested to, at any time, make a full scrutiny of its circulation lists and records and to visit its press and mailing departments to check and keep tab on the number of papers printed and the disposition made of the same.

LITERARY NOTES.

"Mother Wild Goose and Her Wild Beast Show," is the title of a new juvenile by the well-known artist author, J. Bridgman. The familiar rhymes of Mother Goose have been parodied, and animals, as subjects of the rhymes, add to the attractiveness of the work.

The H. M. Caldwell Co. have added to their well-known illustrated library of famous books and famous authors, which now comprises some two hundred volumes of selected masterpieces in all branches of literature, "Prus and Li" by Augustus Curtius; "Mr. Midshipman Easy," by Capt. Frederick Marryat; "The Wonder Book," and "True Stories," by Nathaniel Hawthorne; "The Virgilians," by William Makepeace Thackeray; "The Story of the Three Kings," by Francis Parkman; "Kavanaugh," and "Evangeline," by H. W. Longfellow; "Sketch Book," by Washington Irving.

Collier's Weekly opens its dramatic season with an "all-star" cast of contributors. The thirty-two page dramatic number, which has just been issued, includes John Drew's "Reminiscences of Augustus Curtius," by Augustus Curtius; "Trials of a Stage Career," by David Bolsoas on "Stage Management," Mrs. Elske on "The Evil of the Syndicate," and other articles of equal interest. Contributors include Mrs. Elske, Mrs. Moyné, Leslie Carter, W. J. Ferguson, Mrs. Fernandez, etc., in addition to a critical review of the season's plays by Augustus Curtius.

Rev. John White Chadwick, son of John White Chadwick and Jane (Stanley) Chadwick, was born at Marblehead, Mass., Oct. 18, 1859. Leaving school at the age of thirteen, he was employed for some months in a dry goods store, and afterwards engaged in shoemaking until 1878, when he entered the Worcester Normal school, from which he was graduated in February, 1880.

A large Dublin manufacturer has a room entirely furnished with Irish pattern carpets on the floors, the curtains at the windows, and the bed covers, are made from this substance. For years he has been manufacturing this material, which is now very largely used in the United States.

Softly in the early morning Creeps the baby from his nest, And he cuddles down beside me, With his hand upon my breast. Then, with dewy eyes uplifted, He, in tender mine to see, "Mamma, dear, does not you want me?"

Will he know my eyes are weighted With the heavy seal of sleep; And he cuddles down beside me, In the poppy valley deep. "I'm so tired, dear, I murmur, But he kisses me, and says, 'Mamma, dear, does not you want me?'"

Do I want thee, Oh, my darling! Born and bred, and all the while! God has set me in thy path, In the glory of thy smile. So I'll love thee, my dear, With a mother's fondness kind, And he shouts aloud in triumph: "Mamma, dear, does not you want me?"
