IMPOSING SPECTACLE IN STREETS OF LONDON

Body of Victoria, borne on a Gun Carriage, Was Followed by Many Royal Mourners. LONDON, Feb. 2.—With every circumstance of splendid pomp befitting the obsequies of so mighty and well beloved a monarch as that of Queen Victoria was borne through the streets of the capital and started towards the ancient fortress of the Tower of London.

DUKE OF NORFOLK, Hereditary Grand Marshal, in Charge of Queen's Funeral.

Henry Fitzalan Howard, Duke of Norfolk and marshal of the queen's funeral, is the premier duke of England and takes precedence before all nobles after the prince of the blood.

The uniforms of the troops and the gold trappings of the foreign sovereigns, princes and representatives forming a glittering medley, gave brilliant color to the scene. The chief mourner himself, though this was partially hidden by his overcoat, surrounded by his corps, helped to lighten the symbols of mourning marking the route.

Never in English history has a sovereign been borne to the grave attended by so many distinguished mourners. The gathering of crowned heads surpassed those who rode in the jubilee procession. All the great officers of state participated.

The display of the naval and military forces reached the great total of 35,000 men. The firing of minute guns and the tolling of bells at a quarter past 11 announced to the countless multitudes who had been crowding London's streets since daylight that the funeral procession with the body of Queen Victoria had begun its passage through the capital.

The people fought for hours for a glimpse of the coffin and the kings and others following it. They saw a long procession of soldiers, a passing show of dazzling regalia, with hundreds of ladies crowding after and then dispersed, while all the church chimers of the city were ringing and muffled dirges were played.

Europe has seen grander royal funerals than the queen's and has a more gorgeous spectacle in the procession of her 51 end of the gun carriage, just over the gun. On the foot of the coffin were two smaller coffins with a gold-jeweled scepter lying between them. The eight horses which drew the gun carriage were almost concealed beneath their rich harnesses. A large bow of purple was attached to the coffin. This was the only mark which distinguished the coffin.

Around the coffin walked the stalwart bearers, non-commissioned officers of the Guards and Household cavalry, and on either side were the queen's eunuchs, lords-in-waiting and physicians. All the uniforms were covered with long, dark cloaks.

The spectators so quickly past that the spectators hardly realized it or had time to bare their heads, or comprehend the details when a group of magnificently attired horsemen, who neither knew of the coffin nor of the funeral, were charged, was before them.

THE KING. Immediately after the company about the coffin, three royal mourners rode in the rear. King Edward, in the central figure of the three, but no less ostentatious personage was seen in the procession. A black cape, with a plume of white feathers on his head, and a long black cloak was buttoned around him and hung down over the big black horse which he was riding.

THE KAISER. Beside King Edward rode Emperor William, his nephew and neighbor. The emperor, wearing a black-horned helmet, and a blue and white uniform, was the first to alight from the carriage. He looked every inch a soldier and the commander of men. His imperial majesty glared right and left as he rode and his hand was frequently raised to the red and white feathers hanging over his hat, as he responded to salutes.

FIELD MARSHAL ROBERTS. After the funeral party itself, the dominating figure of the day was Field Marshal Earl Roberts. When his well-known carriage came in view, the king forgot the solemnity of the occasion and broke into cheers also shouting "Robts" and other expressions of familiar approval.

IMPRESSIVE SCENE AT PADDINGTON STATION Children of Her Late Majesty Stood Silently While the Body Was Placed on the Train. LONDON, Feb. 2.—For an hour before the arrival of the procession Paddington station was the center of striking scenes. There were assembled there, clad in glittering court costumes, the ambassadors, ministers and representatives of every civilized country on the globe.

THE PROCESSION. Then the bearer party advanced to the gun carriage and with his hand at the salute and standing a little in advance of the carriage, King Edward watched the painfully slow removal of the coffin from the gun carriage. It was finally accomplished in the hall and the remains of the British crown were placed on the coffin.

SOLEMN SERVICES IN ST. GEORGE'S CHAPEL Ancient Worshiping Place of Kings at Windsor—Benediction Pronounced by Archbishop of Canterbury. WINDSOR, Feb. 2.—By noon many nobilities in full uniform had arrived and the streets were jammed. The scarlet coats of the household cavalry and the grenadiers and the helmets of the infantry lined the streets picturesque. Sand was scattered along the route, to prevent the possibility of slipping. The court yard of the castle was filled with privileged spectators. Exquisite horses were placed in the courtyard, and almost covered the steps up which the coffin was brought. Inside the people in gorgeous uniforms and in deep black robes were waiting in the courtyard wearing the dress of the George period, with big lace ruffles, bright red coats and white breeches and stockings.

St. George's chapel was a magnificent sight and drew attention with the official and the college of heralds, gorgeous in quaint mantles, tabards and insignia and the mediaeval-looking yomen of the guard carrying the halberds.

There was a slight drizzle during the morning which served to discourage somewhat the waiting crowds, who had taken their places in the stands prepared for a long wait. The troops and the police poured in steadily, lining the route and guarding the station. Mild excitement was aroused in the crowd and the bearers from the Tower of London arrived and entered the castle. The officials in gay court uniform and the life guards with their flowing plumes galloped through the streets.

As the time for the arrival of the funeral train approached the vicinity of the station was thronged by a brilliant gathering of diplomats, privy council and military and naval officers in uniforms of endless variety. A gun carriage, similar to the one used by the king, was drawn up at 2 o'clock struck the tolling bells announced the approach of the funeral train, the engine of which had its front decked with magnificent white streamers, tied with purple streamers, with the imperial and royal monogram in the center. Immediately after its arrival Queen Alexandra alighted from the carriage and stepped into a closed carriage. As the coffin was lifted by grenadiers the diplomats and officers stood at the salute.

DRAWN BY BLUEJACKETS. Hardly had the coffin reached the gun carriage when the funeral procession started. The order had just been given to start, the muffled drums rolled and, to the strains of Chopin's funeral march, the head of the procession moved on. It was not until it was found impossible to induce the artillery horses to move. They had grown cold from long waiting and the biting wind was so keenly narrow, crossed overturning the gun carriage. The king looked terribly distressed and the marshal of the procession was powerless to do anything to help. The order "pile arms" rang out and the clean-shaven, hand-looking men, doubled to the front and the admiral of the fleet, all by the order of the king, removed the refractory horses, improved ropes cut of the traces and started the gun carriage with its burdens towards the chapel. The incident occurred at a spot where Roderick MacLean shot at the queen in 1852. The refractory horses only delayed the procession fifteen minutes and the coffin was placed in the gun carriage and the procession moved on at a sluggish pace.

King Edward, Emperor William and the Duke of Connaught followed the bier closely. As they walked the names, foreign representatives and yomen. Without further incident the procession moved into the long walk, thence up the steps to the door of the chapel, where it passed beneath the dead queen's favorite rooms and thus on to St. George's chapel.

AT ST. GEORGE'S CHAPEL. The great window of St. George's chapel was brightly lit. The king threw a soft light over this burial and worshiping place of kings. Before each casket glimmered the waxen taper of the king's arms. Above their heads, were the special insignia of each knight, while hanging over this were the mottoes of the knights of the order. On each side of the altar, flamed two rows of candles, causing the gold and red of the king's robes to stand out in contrast with these rows of light and color, sat the long line of princesses and ladies-in-waiting, making a foreground of brilliant purple, red and blue. The profusion of flowers which was draped about the altar, and the light in. On the chancel only a very few lilies and the most delicate green ferns were used for the altar decorations.

Among the early arrivals were ministers and ex-ministers in full state uniform, their breasts a mass of gold braid. The king, in the cabinet took their seats in a row. Lord Rosebery came in about 1:15 p. m. Most of the diplomatic corps occupied the two rows of stalls on the right of the chancel. The king, in the cabinet took their seats in a row. Some doctors never advance, but the medical profession as a whole has made proud and useful progress during the closing years of the Nineteenth Century. Old fogysm is a thing of the past in this Twentieth Century. The ancient code of medical ethics, with its fixed rules and hide-bound regulations, is now fast becoming moss-covered and obsolete.

"I am glad that the doctor cured him; I am glad that the doctor put it in the paper that he could cure him, and if any doctor is certain that he can cure such disease and does not put it in the paper, I am sorry. What a pity it would have been had this doctor, with his wealth of science and experience, left him uncured! What a pity it would have been if the afflicted man had been so prejudiced against advertising as to read the responsible certificate of the doctor and yet give him the go-by as a quack!

The physician in charge at the Minnesota State Medical Institute, says: "Early in my professional career I selected for my life work a specialty to which I have earnestly devoted the best years of my existence, namely, Neurology. I have spared neither time, labor, nor expense in acquiring such knowledge, skill, experience, and scientific equipments as would be most useful to myself and beneficial to my patients. I have searched, examined and experimented with all the wonders pertaining to my profession, and have developed and put into practice various forms of treatment for Varicocele, Stricture, Syphilitic Blood Poison, Nervo-Sexual Debility and allied troubles of men and women.

ALL ASSOCIATE DISEASES CURED. In curing a disease of any kind we never fail to remove all reflex complications. It is blood is Varicocele, the weakness caused by it disappears. It is Stricture, and his development of the prostate, bladder or kidney affections, the injured organs are all restored to perfectly healthy condition. It is Blood Poison, any and all skin, Bone Disease arising from the taint, are entirely removed and permanently eliminated from the system. If it is Impotency, the many distressing symptoms following in its train and indicating a pre-arranged physical, mental and sexual power are totally removed and rapidly replaced by the youthful energy or robust manhood. Hence, all resulting ill and reflex complications which rob property, terminate associate diseases, and which, in fact, are often more serious than the original ailment that gives rise to them—we say disappear completely and forever with the cure of the main malady.

NERVOUS DEBILITY. ITS REMEDY. Men, many of you are now reaping the result of your former folly. Your manhood is falling, your vitality is waning, your strength is failing, your energy is exhausted, your mind is clouded, your memory is failing, your business is suffering, your pleasure is gone, your health is ruined, your life is a misery. We have a remedy for you. It is a simple, safe, and effective remedy. It will restore your manhood, your vitality, your strength, your energy, your mind, your memory, your business, your pleasure, your health, your life. It will do it all. It will do it all.
