HATCHERIES STAY HERE

FORMALLY TRANSFERRED TO STATE BY TITLE AND TRUST COMPANY

A VICTORY FOR ST. PAUL

No Danger of Removal to Any Other City in the State—Governor Signs the Bill.

The state fish hatcheries, comprising seven acres, will today be transferred to the state by the James Stinson estate. The transfer means a victory for St. Paul, for now there will be no further question of having the hatcheries moved to another city, and the public-spirited citizens who have worked to bring about the deal are well satisfied at the accomplishment of the end in view.

The question of having the hatcheries transferred to the state first came up seven months ago. The Commercial club and the Dayton's Bluff Improvement association then took the matter under consideration. Rumors were afloat to the effect that a movement was on foot to have the hatcheries removed from St. Paul, and both organizations, as well as the citizens of St. Paul generally, were against this. Contributions were then ordered, and from many sources money enough was gathered to have the transfer made.

Representative Dunn's bill for the control of the fish hatcheries has now been signed by the governor, and the game and fish commission will now have authority to get more land for the hatcheries when it is needed. In speaking of the transfer yesterday, Mr. Dunn said: "Everybody realizes that the transfer to the state will be a good thing. No rental will have to be paid and the state is free to enlarge the hatcheries as it sees fit. A large percentage of the money needed was raised by the Dayton's bluff people, and the Commercial club helped considerably. It is not necessary to mention any figures just as present."

Searching for Gold. WINONA, Minn., March 8.—(Special.)—A rather peculiar story that does not find much credence comes from the village of Homer, six miles east of here. It is to the effect that two strangers are now there hunting for some $8,000 alleged to be concealed in a cave near that place, but have not as yet succeeded in their quest. The story told by the men is that a dying man confided to them in a box that he had once with two other men robbed a Milwaukee train and that they had made their escape near Homer, and being hard pressed had hidden the money in a cave a mile from that village. They had then separated, and he had never seen his companions since that time. That the money was still there he knew, as he had been there two years ago and taken away $500, leaving $3,500 behind.
