DEATH OF SERVANT GIRLS.

Six hundred girls answered an advertisement of the St. Louis Cereal company, to take the places of fifty girls who had gone on a strike because their foreman had called them a "bunch of rascals." A large percentage of the number were servants or domestics. They said they had grown tired of their wretched duties and wanted to try life in a factory. As previously stated, the firm refused to take back the old hands, but refused to take back the leaders of the strike. St. Louis has a famine in servants and housemaids. Employment agencies say that it is impossible to supply the demand for good girls. The daily papers are filled with advertisements of this character.

John J. Marks, of the St. Louis company, said yesterday that his firm's advertisement had convinced him that the wage-earning girls of the period would rather toil hard all day in a factory than do domestic work, because, in the former instance, they had their evenings to themselves, while employment in families meant only one afternoon off a week, and that it was impossible to supply the demand for good girls. The daily papers are filled with advertisements of this character.

David Marks, president of the company, said that he believed one reason for so many girls seeking employment in factories and deserts the house and household work was that they had been hoodled by men. "Factory life has less drudgery and gives the girls more time for themselves," he said, "and I have found that women do not like to work under their own sex as they do when they accept places as servants."

It is estimated that 700 servant girls might find good homes and profitable employment in St. Louis today. When almost all of the 600 who applied to the St. Louis company for work were turned away someone suggested to the girls to answer the advertisements that had been inserted in the daily papers for servant girls. There was not one in the number who signified a willingness to do so. Mr. Marks advised some of them to accept the good homes that were thus opened to them, but the united reply was "no stop-lifting for us." Three women who had taught in the schools had been applicants and were accepted by the company. One woman who carried a baby wanted to pack the cereals in cartons, but when she saw the place and all the work taken she was advised to take a servant's position, where she might keep her little one in comfort, but she said that she would rather work in a factory at $2 a week—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

UNCONSIDERED HOSPITALITY.

London Truth.

"During one of the hottest of the recent spells of hot weather and November baronet came across three workmen engaged on a job on his estate. One of them remarked, as workmen not infrequently do, on the dryness of the job. The baronet, perhaps, extended himself to the baronet's temper; at any rate, he turned away with the reply: "If you are thirsty, you know where the well is. You will find a well there." The baronet over his remark a little later, he flashed across the baronet's mind that he had been ordered for three hours of child page to be put into the well and lowered into the well to cool for dinner. He hastened to the well and discovered three empty bottles!"
