

INDUSTRIAL TRAINING

SUBJECT AT YESTERDAY'S MEETING OF LOWER TOWN MOTHERS CLUB

MRS. LA PENOTIERE SPEAKS

President of the State Federation of Women's Clubs Favors Introduction of Manual Training in Schools.

"I believe that the parents of a young man about to marry should learn whether the young woman has chosen to make a good housekeeper or not, and if they find she will not, should use all their persuasion to break off the match. If the parents of young men do this the mothers of daughters will train their girls to meet domestic requirements," said Mrs. E. M. La Penotiere, president of the state federation of women's clubs during the course of an address delivered yesterday before the Lower Town Mothers' club at the Hawthorne school. The subject of Mrs. La Penotiere's address was "Industrial Education" and she made a strong plea for its introduction in the grade schools of St. Paul and Minneapolis.

It was doubtless owing to the fact that the newly elected president of the state federation was to speak that so many women were present at yesterday's meeting. Those present included many who are not members of the club. Mrs. La Penotiere's paper was an excellent and comprehensive one. She called attention to the fact that a Swede or a Swiss was rarely found begging on the streets and she thought this was due to the fact that in both Sweden and Switzerland every child is given an industrial education that will fit him or her to earn a living. The speaker called attention to the fact that while present education taught people how to live it did not always teach them how to get a living. She thought the Mothers' clubs could do much toward the establishment of manual training in the grade schools and suggested that at various mothers' clubs of the city combine for the accomplishment of this work.

AGED WOMEN ENJOY AN ANNUAL DINNER

Dr. Holmes' famous toast, "The Boys," would have a local application had it only been addressed to "The Girls," for St. Paul can boast of a club to the members of which every word in Dr. Holmes' verses might be fittingly applied. This "Girls' club is made up of sixteen ladies, the eldest of whom is eighty-one, the youngest of whom is twenty-two. They have a dinner party in honor of the birthday of the oldest member, Mrs. Elizabeth Morse Woodbury. Yesterday the party was held at the home of Mrs. E. B. Dcran, the youngest member. Because of her youth Mrs. Dcran has always been as the hostess of these affairs, and yesterday's celebration took the form of a luncheon given at her home on East Congress street. The luncheon table was decorated with an immense bunch of chrysanthemums. Each guest wore her best black silk gown, with a bit of lace at throat and wrist applied. This year Mrs. Dcran was assisted by Mrs. George Doran, Mrs. D. W. Sitts, Mrs. O. M. Fullington and Miss Alice Robinson. After luncheon the ladies worked on an autograph quilt, which is to be presented to Mrs. Woodbury on her eighty-first birthday.

APPLE CAKE.

This is a good warm cake, or, by the addition of a little sauce it becomes an excellent pudding; it has many names and variations. The most satisfactory for making is as follows: Sift one-half level teaspoons of baking powder with one pint of flour, rub in three level tablespoons of butter and mix with seven-eighths cup of milk and one beaten egg. Butter a shallow pan, pour in the dough and spread smoothly into the corners. Pare and core, cut into quarters, mildly acid apples that cook quickly and lay in rows across the top of the cake; sprinkle with sugar and bake in a quick oven. Another way is to cut the apple in eighths, and set in rows with sharp edge in the dough, sprinkle with sugar in which a half teaspoon of ground cinnamon has been mixed. Sauce: mix one cup of milk with one level tablespoon of butter as a cake or as a pudding, with the following sauce: Mix two level tablespoons of corn starch with enough cold water to make it smooth and stir into one pint of boiling water; boil five minutes, add three-quarters cup of sugar, one level tablespoon of butter, the grated rind of half a lemon, one-half teaspoon of lemon flavoring and the beaten white of one egg. -Alice E. American Historic Dolls. A historic doll in America, to which attaches a good deal of interest, is owned by Mrs. William Wallace, of Moorhead, Minn. It was once owned by Hannah Marcella, to whom Gen. Lafayette gave it in exchange for a kiss. It is not much more than a doll, but it is a valuable relic of the past. It is a flat-faced little baby, with abnormally red cheeks and a shaggy nose. It wears a silk gown and a Napoleon hat. Another historic American doll is one owned by the Lincoln family of Massachusetts. She is a dark doll named Georgia, and is credited with being over twenty years old. She is brown and battered, but has stood the stress of four generations of children remarkably well. She had young folks all the while, and family heirloom for forty years, when about three years ago she was once more brought into the world and established as one of the large family of dolls belonging to the present generation. She takes the place of honor at her right, and is really respected and revered by the little ones, who call her "dear, great-grandma."

Small Boy (an Envy Grant). Small Boy (an Envy Grant)—I heard you kiss sister in the hall last night, that's what. Young Man—Well, here's a quarter, now you keep your mouth shut. Small Boy (outside)—Gee, wasn't that easy? And I was dead asleep in bed. Detroit Free Press.

The Globe's Daily Short Story

Van Ness' Honeymoon.

Copyright, 1901, by Daily Story Pub. Co. The boys had sent for Ashbee to help them. "She's the girl of the hour, a fellow never forgets." Dalbaic had written. "Sweep everything before her without anybody being able to impress her. My fellows are not at all wordsy, but you'd better come over and vindicate us."

After that Ashbee had rather looked for something superb, and during his first few moments beside Miss Rozelle he understood the potency of allurement, which radiated from so nondescript a face and figure and certain boyish attitudes that flavored of a bearding house boy, out for fun. The apple of his eye, the sole inspiration of half as many appealingly diligent tongues, the little lady in the middle of the evening suddenly leaped out of her hammock to scamper across to a cluster of wallflowers. A number of men trailed after her. Ashbee, whose conversation with her had been so marked, turned fretfully to Dalbaic with:

"It's her blasted indifference that drives you dummies mad. Why don't you in anything you try, but chestnutty jealousy trick is no good. You should see her egging us on. But I thought you probably would be getting busy with the lady by this time so made other plans for the evening. Come along."

"Thank you, I'll stay here," Ashbee rejoined thoughtfully, remaining in the very chair he had first taken. He was in a somewhat pained and sore growing dreamily apathetic to his environs.

Later in the evening, when the desolation of the veranda had been perfected and the empty chairs were ghosts of the earlier mirth, Rozelle came fluttering back after a book she had left in the hammock. She glanced at Ashbee, but he kept his eyes fixed upon a widow with her small boy tracing a lugubrious stroll over the lawn. Rozelle tossed herself into the hammock and lay there, keeping infinitely silent. Well, Ashbee had been somewhat pained and if Rozelle would not speak neither would he. It seemed a full hour when she at last observed:

"I don't believe you care especially for women's society, do you?" "That would be a rather rude admission to make to you, Miss Rozelle."

"Oh, no, you mustn't mind me," the girl laughed. "I think that's fine and wish I could talk with you. You won't care just for one evening will you? When it's almost over at that!" This irresistible ingenuously melted away every barrier to a long and delectable tete-a-tete. As the two parted Ash-bee suggested that they go for a walk on the morrow, and when she cried "Jolly!" he smiled a thousand times while reflecting on the instantaneousness of his success. "A little coolness, that's all she needed!"

As for the others, printer's ink cannot portray the paralysis that seized the knot of courtship. Miss Rozelle's eyes of witnesses at the hotel as one after another, by little and little they perceived the miracles that were being wrought by Ashbee's hands.

It was that gentleman's second night at the hotel, and the moon swam to illumine his large frame and to glisten on the auburn tresses of Miss Rozelle's dark tresses as the two meandered in and out among the shrubbery on the lawn. The third night, and when the circles along the veranda had been broken up for the night certain discerning eyes spied a rowboat floating down with the tide, they two alone within. At the hop a day or two later Ashbee had Miss Rozelle's best dances, and it was a long time before she had her lover's revenges among the palmy decorations. One morning she tripped over to the station with him. There was a certain coquettish unobtrusiveness about their movements which was past finding out and made them the more serious.

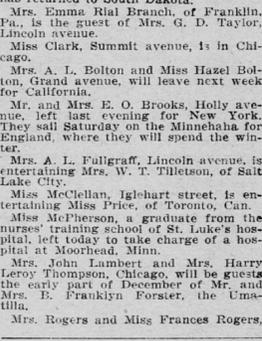

To be sure the men did not stand by Ashbee as Dalbaic had guaranteed, nor did the aforesaid gentleman wish him good-speed in his run. "It's all very well," he remarked gloomily, "but Ashbee's heart isn't marly any more."

"Comfort yourself with the reflection that the substance that affects marble is acid," Van Ness laughed in rejoinder. He alone of all the men had been impervious to the charms of Ashbee's charms. The affair had rather surprised him, and that despite the fact that before the conqueror's arrival Rozelle had vouchsafed him some few favors in the way of promenades. Still he had never made further headway and seemed contented with whatever gifts the petite goddess provided him, always good-naturedly laughing over the fumbling of others, assuring them that the game was not worth their agonies.

At about the end of Ashbee's second week, however, it appeared for the moment that the young woman had returned to the old love. She rose with her customary abruptness from the circle of trousers, remarking that perhaps Van Ness would fancy an airing. He sprang up hurriedly to take advantage of this wonderful suggestion with every mark of delight. But they were not away long. Soon Ashbee, with a suspicious air, asserted an amiable, unimpaired power over the belle by drawing her away for a walk of his own, thus summarily repudiating and averting his slights.
