Almost every day after the commence ment of the big suit important papers would be filed in the office of the district ourt and although in almost constant attendance, The Globe reporter would wake up and discover to his dismay, that his paper had "got left" on some important phase of the case, the papers in which had been filed the preceding day.

This thing went on until it began to be monotonous, when all at once a curious circumstance arose. It was discovered that while the papers were not in the vault at the time of closing up, they were invariably there the next morning when the scoop of which they were the sub-

This complicated matters, but a tew minutes afterwards he was surprised to see his competitor enter the office and go direct to the vault and leave about ten seconds afterwards. After he had departed, The Globe reporter went into the vault and, sure enough, there were the papers properly filed and numbered, showing that they had been secured surreptitiously the night before, and returned the following morning.

The nigger in the woodpile having be uncovered, The Globe man, who could not stand for this sort of work, became angry and in a heated manner laid the matter before one the deputy clerks, intimating, that there might be collusion and threatening to have both the deputy and reporter yanked up for contempt of court for allowing papers to leave the office without an order. Some warm words were exchanged, and here the matter rested for the time being.

The day following the two met on the treat when the discussion was renewed.

street, when the discussion was renewed, and this led to blows, the contestants being separated by pedestrians after a short but sharp conflict. On departing the deputy told his opponent to arm himself, as he intended to do, and the next ject matter appeared.

Late one night, or rather early one morning, a short time ago a party of newspaper men met by chance in the lobby of one of the principal hotels of St. Paul, and after the customary exchange of "pipe" stories and "fairy" tales, such as are wont to enliven the idle hours in Bohemia, drifted to the players present reserves of this city. pioneer newspaper reporters of this city.

And what a set of hardworking, for the most part conscientious, and jolly, good fellows they were, as called to remembrance, partaking as they did of the hearty and courageous spirit of the fron-tier; for this was before the electrical age, and things had not yet become set-tled in the precisely correct and mechanical groove since attained. As in most other departments of life, the conditions governing the collection, preparation and dissemination of news undergone a marvelous change ing the past twenty-five years, and the modern reporter who has only recently come on the stage can have but slight conception of the trials and hardships his predecessors were called upon to face in chasing the elusive item, or corralling a

Only twenty-five years—thirty years at the most-and yet the scene has changed as completely as though exercised by Aladdin's wand.

To say that the reporter of a quarter of a century ago in St. Paul was a rustler for news is putting it mild, for in the very nature of his physical surroundings, and the environment of things, he was compelled to move lively in order that his paper might make any kind of a

At this period the telephone, that greatest of labor, time and leg-saving institu-tions, had not been invented, or at least it was not in common use; there were no electric lights to guide the tired and belated scribe over rough and unpaved streets, and worst of all there was no street car service to speak of.

The writer recalls to mind the time when the upper and lower town service consisted of about a dozen bob-tailed and Minky street cars, drawn by a tired and unwilling mule, and the locomotion was so tedious and slow that half the time one could not tell whether the cars were coming or going. Sincerely speaking, this primitive kind of service, short as were the distances traversed, was practically useless to an active and enterprising newspaper man, and in the winter season it was simply nil, for the reason that, in use of a heavy snowstorm or blizzard, are cars stopped running at dusk, and business for the night would be indef-initely suspended.

At this time also the numerous high hills that abounded in the city had not been reduced, so that considering the cold and the stygian-like darkness, the re-porter intent on chasing down a murder, suicide or any other sensational bit of news late in the night really took his life

But for all this there was a zest and freedom of restraint about the work that gave it a certain charm, even though many a story obtained late at night was written with half frozen fingers by the light of a lamp, and with the stub of a pencil, for this was before the advent of the typewriter, which has now become almost indispensable in facilitating the preparation of copy. But to return to the hotel lobby, and veteran reporter who had become the dean of the faculty, so to speak, and who, in a reminiscent mood, drew aside the curtain from the portrait gallery of memory, where the dear old kindly faces seem to beam just as kindly as before. Many of the veteran pioneer reporters and doubtless they have been assigned City Editor St. Peter to keep cases on the judgment day rolls, and it is safe to say that they will be in evidence in some way, when the trump of Gabriel sounds "thirty." Others of the early day scribes are scattered throughout the country, and a few continue to live in the Twin Cities.

In some respects to secure a scoop in those days was not regarded as the prin cipal aim in life, which is illustrated by a story related by H. P. Hall, the veteran newspaper publisher, the incident occurring as far back as 1863. At this time Mr. Hall was conducting a paper called the Union, and as usual, he was "doing things" all the way from the galley rack to the press room and mail-

At this period George Moore, who was collector of the port of St. Paul, was also the reportorial staff of the Press, being, of course, before its consolidation with the Pioneer, and for which services he drew the princely salary of $6 per eek, which may have accounted for his lethargy at times.

One night Mr. Hall reported an important meeting for his paper and he was given the manuscript copy of a set of resolutions with the understanding that he was to give a copy to Mr. Moore. Now, the latter was a great checker player, and when Mr. Hall called at the office at 9 o'clock in the evening, he found Mr. Moore deeply absorbed in a game. He was informed of the agree ment, and when Mr. Hall produced the resolutions for him to copy he glanced up from the checker board and said that as would run the resolution that night and besides he thought they did not resign, as he did not care to involve the paper in trouble. Mr. Hall advised him to put a revolver in his pocket and protect himself if necessary, saying that the paper would look after itself, and the writer, too, if it came to a shown-down.

For two or three days the reporter, who was compelled to visit the court house several times a day, and be constantly on the streets, went about his duties, experiencing the while that queer and creepy feeling, as though every minute would be his last. The thing begant to look serious and became the subject of unpleasant street talk. At the expiration of three days "Jimmy" O'Brien, who was then chief deputy clerk of courts and who has since been county auditor, called on the reporter, and with the remark that the matter had gone far

As The Globe reporter had gained his point he removed his war paint, put away his gun, and the hatchet was buried indefinitely. After this, it is safe to say, there were no more "scoops" from that

As an illustration that a reporter sometimes gets badly left, no matter how enterprising, an amusing experience is re-called, which caused one Globe man to go away back and humbly sit down. The time was on Sunday night some years ago, two days before election, and at the close of what had been an exciting political campaign, as all of the local offices were involved. Mrs. G. Schloss, a housekeeper aged thirty years, living at 31 Seymour street, Germantown, Philadelphia, Pa., writes: "I want to tell you how Ripans Tabules have benefited me. I have been troubled with dyspepsia and indigestion for about five years. I did not think much about it at first but as time went by I began to think. I read about Ripans Tabules in the newspaper, the Record, and they seemed to fit my case so well that I got some of the Tabules. They worked like a charm and I feel so well at the present time that I cannot afford to do without them any more. I take them regularly. I had allopathic and homeopathic doctors, and with all it cost me they did me no good. I had very distressing headaches, was sick to the stomach, and I felt as if I did not care to see any one and just be by myself, but I am thankful to the party that ever invented Ripans Tabules and wish him much success. You may believe me, as this is the truth and nothing but the truth. You can use my name and the testimonial as much as you please."

There is scarcely any condition of ill kealth that is not benefited by the occasional use of R.I.P.A.N.S Tabule, and the price, 10 for 5 cents, does not bar them from any home or justify anyone in enduring ills that are easily cured. For sale by all druggists.

The first thing to do was to ascertain who was in attendance. This, it was thought, would form a basis for subsequent pumping purposes, and it was discovered that one of the windows on the side of the market house on the ground floor had been left open. As this window led to the bell and stellyway it was deled to the hall and stairway, it was decided that the reporter must obtain ingress, and in order to do this he was raised on the shoulders of the politician, and finally obtained a foothold, the window being some distance from the ground. Entering the hall he crept softly up the dark stairway until the court room was reached, and peering through the keyhole not a person could be seen, nor
