DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS

WATCH IT! Watch the Urine, should it contain a "brick-dust" like deposit; should it be too highly colored; should urination be too frequent, painful in passage or irregular in any way, 'tis a serious matter—demands attention. When the kidneys fail in their work—when their delicate fibrous filters become clogged they warn you through the back. The back has many aches and pains from kidney ills. Help the kidneys when they're sick—help them before congestion or inflammation makes you miserable; before urinary disorders appear.

Doan's Kidney Pills relieve the kidneys—cure the aching back and every kidney ill down to dangerous diabetes, Dropsy, Bright's disease. Positive proof of the efficacy of Doan's Kidney Pills in the testimony of friends and neighbors.

ST. PAUL PROOF.

South Franklin Street.

That given by Mrs. T. McMahon, 225 South Franklin street, says: "Had I known of Doan's Kidney Pills several years ago I would have been spared much suffering. My experience with this remarkable remedy impels me to earnestly recommend a trial by those in need of a medicine for kidney complaint. Mr. McMahon procured it for me at F. M. Parker's drug store, corner of Wabasha and Fifth streets, and, in addition to relieving me of kidney complaint, Doan's Kidney Pills rendered my health better than it had been for three years prior to using them."

GET DOAN'S. Don't accept a substitute. Nothing else as good. No other kidney remedy endorsed by people you know.

ST. PAUL PROOF.

Ravoux Street.

Mrs. M. J. Maloney, of 226 Ravoux street, says: "An advertisement stating the merits of Doan's Kidney Pills led Mr. Maloney to go to F. M. Parker's drug store, corner of Wabasha and Fifth streets, and get a box. His business requires much heavy lifting and strain on the back. The result was more or less backache. The use of one box of Doan's Kidney Pills effectually ended this and banished all difficulty with the kidneys."

All Druggists sell DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS. Price 50 cents per box.

The Globe's Daily Short Story

Weighed in the Balance.

By EDGAR WELTON COOLEY.

(Copyright, 1902, by Daily Story Pub. Co.) Blakely bent over his books with an earnest but troubled expression on his face. Save for one incandescent light that burned above his desk, the bank was in total darkness. A cold, crizzling rain was falling without, and pedestrians hurried past, their umbrellas carried over their heads to protect them from the raindrops, which the wind seemed determined to drive into their faces.

Two of the other bank clerks, who had been working overtime, had long since gone to their homes, but the bookkeeper worked on quietly, anxiously, determinedly. After a few minutes he determined to drive into the city, to get a new ink bottle. He unlocked the door, stepped out, and looked at his watch. It was ten minutes past ten. He hesitated for a moment, then he turned back and closed the door. He was alone in the bank.

hand affectionately upon his arm and smiled up into his face, "try and get an opportunity to speak to him today about—about our engagement. I am so anxious to know what he says." Blakely hardly knew what his answer was. The landscape seemed to whirl around in a most bewildering manner, and he made the rest of his journey to the bank as one in a dream. Had he done right the night before? Should he have informed the president of the shortage? At the last moment he had hesitated, believing that he would be justified in first acquainting the cashier of the discovery. Somehow he could not bring himself to believe that Manning was an embezzler. "Perhaps," he had reasoned, clinging to hope, "perhaps I am in error. Perhaps he can explain away the apparent discrepancy."

PICTURE PUZZLE.

Teaching Hector to read. Find three other dogs. Solution for yesterday's puzzle: Chinese Quarter.

Why had the irony of fate made him the discoverer of the awful crime? For years—his life, almost—he had loved Allene; for years he had lived in hopes of which his accounts showed no record, of which Manning had never heard. What had become of the money? Was Manning a thief? Could it be possible he was an embezzler? The bookkeeper groaned aloud and stared blankly at the books before him. Manning an embezzler! Manning—Allene's father—a thief? God! It could not be. And yet—yet, it must be so. The figures told the awful tale too plainly to be doubted. Yes, Manning was, he must be, a defaulter! And he, Blakely, alone of all the world, save Manning himself, knew the terrible truth.

So with the memorandum in his pockets he walked rapidly until he came to the home of the bank's president. But at the gate he hesitated. Then he turned back and walked slowly homeward. It was nearly daybreak before he at last fell into a troubled sleep in which he dreamed of Allene, with tear-dimmed eyes and white face, clothed in the rags of poverty and shrinking, in her disgrace, from public gaze. So careworn was his face at the breakfast table that his mother expressed her fear that he was overtaxing his strength. But he laid the blame for his changed appearance on indigestion and hurried away, after partaking of but a few mouthfuls. On his way to the bank he met Allene, and at the sight of her fair, young face his heart sank within him. "I am so glad I met you, George," she said. "Father is arranging to leave the city tonight. I do not know where he is going, as he refuses to discuss his trip and the cause raised his head, and their eyes met. In that instant Manning reached a conclusion. "Thank God," he said to himself, "there is no deceit, no guilt hidden behind that open countenance."

So confident was he that he had read the other's face aright, that he almost smiled as he picked up his books, and stopping over to Manning's desk, requested him to accompany him into the president's private office. When he closed behind them, Blakely said: "Mr. Manning, I have been unable to balance your accounts. I figure you twenty thousand dollars short, and I cannot find my error. A bright gleam sprang into the cashier's eyes, but he gave no evidence of embarrassment, although Blakely looked searchingly into his face. "Let's see the figures," Manning said. Blakely pointed out the discrepancy, and the cashier raised his head, and their eyes met. "It looks bad, doesn't it, Blakely?" he said. "Yes, Mr. Manning," replied Blakely, candidly, "it does look bad—on the face of it. But I know it must be an error of mine. There must be some entries I have overlooked, but I cannot find them. With tears of gratitude springing to his eyes, Manning clasped one of Blakely's hands in both of his. "God bless you for your confidence, Blakely," he replied, "and above all I am pleased that I have not been mistaken in my opinion of your honesty, my boy. The truth is, that $20,000 was sent to our New York correspondent, but I intentionally omitted making an entry because—well, I'll tell you, Blakely, I have lately become interested in a large importing house in Paris. I am going to New York tonight on business connected with the venture. We will need a manager—American—one we can trust implicitly, and I—I wanted to put your honesty to the test—my boy. I have had you in
