SUNDAY, MAY 25, 1902.

That was a notable instance of brotherly affection in Chicago, when one Mr. Kirk comes to the front and confesses himself involved with a woman in order to save his brother, who is accused by the latter's husband.

MILES SHOULD RETIRE.

The action of the president in revoking the executive order which placed the war department in charge of Lieut. Gen. Miles and Adj. Gen. Corbin in turn in the absence of the secretary and assistant secretary of war is naturally regarded by the public as another blow aimed at the official standing and influence of the commanding officer of the American army.

Beginning with the Spanish war every act of the war department has been hostile to Miles. He was ignored in the Cuban campaign. He was practically censured in connection with the embalmment scandal. He was repudiated at the outset of the Philippine campaign.

It is related that the closing hours of the club ladies' convention at Sleepy Eye was devoted to business. Rather a queer place for folks to meet who have an eye exclusively for business.

GROSS POET; ROSTAND THIEF.

By decree of Judge C. C. Kohlsaat, brother of Baker H. H. Kohlsaat, Samuel Eberly Gross, d'aler in Chicago real estate, is a greater poet than Edmond Rostand, alleged author of "Cyrano de Bergerac." The Chicago jurist gives Mr. Rostand a rude awakening by telling him in legal verbiage that away back in 1875 Mr. Gross really wrote "Cyrano de Bergerac" under the name of "The Merchant Prince of Cornville," and that, moreover, he must pay Mr. Gross $1 damages.

no time since his elevation to his present position has Gen. Miles seemed to enjoy the confidence of his superior officers. He was right in the embalmment scandal, and to his initiative it is due that the responsibility for the evils then exposed was placed upon the war department. The Globe believes that he was right in his position on the army reorganization bill and again on his overtures looking toward the establishment of peace in the Philippines and on the Sampson-Schley controversy. He was wrong, and he is wrong, and no self-respecting soldier or civilian will sustain him, in his silent acceptance of the repeated indignities heaped upon him. When he was divested of all active participation in the Spanish war and the determined marplot, Corbin, was given full swing, he yielded his personal self-respect by his acquiescence.

The political opponents of the national administration might naturally be expected to take sides with Miles. They have done so wherever he was right. While political considerations have undoubtedly underlain most of the ill treatment he has received, neither his political nor his personal partisans have shown any disposition to sustain him in his acceptance of the indignities done him. Gen. Miles' career has been an honorable and a useful one to the country as a soldier. His essays in the field of politics, wherever he has shown a disposition to indulge in them, have not been attended with success. Whether the justification of the national executive and the war department has been greater or less in the attitude they have assumed toward Lieut. Gen. Miles at any time, the judgment of his friends and the country alike is that in view of the treatment he has received his duty to both demanded that he should have voluntarily retired from his present rank. His retention of it can be productive of no good results, and he still has it in his power to restore himself in the good opinion of his countrymen by voluntarily retiring from the nominal headship of the army of the United States.

That other Republican reformer in the sister city, Mr. Megardun, no doubt, feels regret that he did not have the example of the doctor before him some time ago.

A DEAD DIPLOMAT.

The death of Lord Pauncefote, the British ambassador, will be learned with deep regret by the official world at Washington, as well as by the British people. He represented his government with great ability, and was one of its foremost statesmen and diplomats. Since the compulsory withdrawal of his predecessor, he continued, at least until a short time before his death, to represent his nation with the utmost acceptability to the American people. His position among the representatives of the various nations at Washington was one of commanding influence by reason of his seniority, his recognized great ability and experience, and his engaging personal qualities.

The call of death found the British ambassador an old man, whose period of active usefulness would in any event be soon brought to a close. His health was delicate for some time, and the unfortunate incident connected with the Spanish-American war is believed generally to have hastened his end. That incident brought on the deceased gentleman much criticism, whether well or ill merited. It did not appear, however, to have rendered his official position any less secure; and nothing short of his death, and, perhaps, not even that, will suffice to enable the world to judge finally the real character and motive of the act which apparently placed him and his government in an unfriendly attitude toward the United States in the situation created by Spain in Cuba.

The Globe felt called on, in common with many other American newspapers, to express the conviction that on the known facts Lord Pauncefote deserved to be recalled, as was his predecessor, in consequence of his avowed presentation of a proposed note to the representatives of the other powers declaring that our military interference in Cuban affairs would be regarded unopposed by the other powers declaring that our military interference in Cuban affairs would be regarded unopposed by the other powers.

Whether or not the facts relative to the incident are made known as the result of Lord Pauncefote's death, or otherwise, neither the American people, nor their representatives at Washington, will deny to the deceased statesman the fullest recognition of his great abilities. England certainly suffers a great loss in its public life through the death of its ambassador at Washington.

With anything like decent weather there seems now a doubt that the vaudeville performance at the Metropolitan next week—under the management of the newspaperman of St. Paul, in aid of the Coliseum fund will reach the record mark. It should be remembered that this is a performance by the best professionals on the stage, and not an amateur affair. There will not be a dull minute after the curtain is up.

Fitzsimmons and Jeffries are matched hand and fast for a mill for ten championship. Soon there will appear frequent explanations from each of the method to be employed in "doing" the other—but the public will be "done" the night of the fight.

The Tall Pine might have found a more profitable, and an equally honorable home, had he come over here and helped to save another Republican reformer who needed his assistance this year worse even than did Brother Kiefer four years ago.

Mary Ellen Lease has secured a divorce. She recited in her bill of complaint that she was "bored."

manufacturer of verse, says he "borrowed, pilfered and otherwise appropriated scenes, ideas, incidents and even language from 'The Merchant Prince of Cornville.'" Mr. Gross then sticks pins in Mr. Rostand's reputation by particularizing. He asserts, and is backed up by the learned judge, that in each play the heroine has a maid who seconds her in her love affairs; that in each the hero makes love so badly that he is rebuked for his stupidity, that in each there is a proxy who appears in black, that in each musical instruments are introduced at the opening of the balcony scene, that in each balcony scene the proxy lover chants or declaims fit a feigned voice a mass of fantastic matter, and that in each the balcony scene is the pivotal one of the whole play.

Thus it is that Mr. Gross and a federal judge lift Mr. Rostand from his pedestal and consign him to the literary garbage of oblivion. In future, at least in Chicago, the great poets will be ranked about as follows: Gross, Shakespeare, Goethe, Schiller, Byron, Shelley and Tennyson. When poets and real estate men get into the courts the poets usually lose.

Now that Mary Yellen has secured her freedom, what a splendid treat she might form if she united forces with that other charming Kansas divorcee—the lady of the hatched.

MINNEAPOLIS MORAL STATUS.

Where shall Minneapolis be catalogued morally in the list of American cities? Easy as it looks, this is really a problem of extraordinary size. The Flour City is full of New Englanders who take pride in referring to the municipality as clean, healthy, upright. But there are others in Minneapolis who refuse to see the town by that light. They point—and not with pride, either—to the police department, charged with seeing that the laws are obeyed, which is just now under the cloud of alleged free-takings, and urge that where there is so much smoke there must be at least a little fire.

They are not slow in saying, too, that the town is "wide open" in the fullest sense. Every kind of gambling known to Monte Carlo and Butte, Mont., is going on day and night, the wine rooms are as busy as were those of North Clark street, Chicago, before the wave of reform struck the Windy City, and something very closely approaching a carnival of crime is going on right, left and center, increasing daily, after the setting of the sun.

And yet Minneapolis means well. Probably a majority of its citizens believes in right living and strict adherence to just laws and ordinances. At the very moment the rest of the United States was directing the finger of scorn toward Flour City, its municipal court solemnly sentenced a poor fellow who has a horror of falling water to the workhouse for ninety days for stealing an umbrella. Let every man, therefore, weigh his words well before saying Minneapolis is not good. In fact, putting the thing as George Ade would put it, Minneapolis is apparently so bad it is "good."

After all, there is great probability that the Boer war will end before the Philippine war ceases.

WHO SHALL WEAR SHIRT WAISTS?

Every time we have a hot wave worthy of the name that perennial subject, the propriety of the men's shirt waist, two steps over to the front of the stage and demands a hearing. This year it makes its first appearance in that famous old census-stuffing town, Omaha. A band of perspiring boys there turned up at school one afternoon the past week without coats or vests and the person in charge held up its hands in horror and refused to permit the innovation. It is true that the weather was excessively warm, that the youngsters were suffering from the extra-caloric conditions and sought only comfort in going into the school room in their shirt sleeves. However, the pedagogic in charge was shocked, and what matters it if children do suffer? They must be garbed pretty close to the conventional or go home to their mothers.

This is only an instance of what we shall hear all the summer long. The shirt-waist man is a marked man. His desire for comfort is not to be gratified. He will be hissed and hooted until he flies for his coat, perhaps his overcoat. Almost melted with perspiration he will throw off his coat and his vest and dart into a restaurant for his noonday lunch. Half a dozen women in the place will coolly rise, make sneering remarks very much above a whisper and leave the place. The man will have a chill, push aside his dinner and go away unhappy, or, what is much more likely, he will be visited by the fussy proprietor, who will tell him he is driving away the custom of the resort and must not again come into it without his coat.

Admittedly the shirt waist is a comely-looking, exceedingly comfortable garment, one which the women adopted many years ago and have enjoyed ever since. If anybody has a good, strong objection to its use by the men let him present it now. So far as The Globe can see, if a shirt waist is clean and fits well, it is proper for both sexes.

Equal to the Senator Himself. A tramp met Senator Chauncey Depew and asked him, in that easy, velvet-tongued way:

"Would you kindly assist a —" etc. Chauncey, of course, is an easy mark, and so he fanned himself after extracting the quarter, the tramp inquired:

Properly Described. Miss Mobile—Well, Martha, how is your husband now?

plaint that she had provided for herself nearly all the years of her married life, first as washday, and of late years as a stateswoman.

That was a safe order of Carnegie-to give Uncle Sam $30,000,000 for the Philippines. That was the original purchase price, and since then the United States has expended not far from half a billion all told, in the effort to enforce title.

The weather man evidently would be safe in directing the newspapers to keep the prediction in favor of "showers" standing in print for some period to come.

A day's wages given now to the Coliseum fund will result in employment for months to come.

Butte's ball team has been clobbered the "Mary MacLains" and hasn't won a game since.

Charity is not asked by the Cubans, but reciprocity, or a fair exchange.
