

AFTER LEUT. PEARY STEAMER WINDWARD ON THE EVE OF SAILING FOR THE ARCTIC

COMPLETE OVERHAULING OF THIS HISTORIC VESSEL

Plans of the Expedition That Goes Out Under the Direction of the Peary Arctic Club, Which Has Fathered Many an Enterprise in the Cause of Science.

NEW YORK, July 13.—The Peary Arctic steamer Windward arrived at Jersey City today, and will go into commission and depart for the North tomorrow. The Windward came down under her white sails in the early morning from Newburgh, N. Y., where for the last two months she has been receiving new equipment of boilers and machinery, making the run in very creditable time and with a very satisfactory performance of the new engine. The ceremony of transfer from the contractor to the club was very simple. The Stars and Stripes having been hoisted for the first time at the peak, under the special act of congress designed by the late President McKinley, allowing an American registry to the Windward, little Marie Peary, daughter of the explorer, and the most northern born child in the world, hoisted to the foretruck of the club pennant, designed by herself, and also displayed for the first time.

Changes in the Windward.

The Windward, since her arrival in New York three months ago, has been completely changed, and will go north as a full-powered, completely equipped and modern steamer, equal to that for Arctic work. To admit the new and powerful boiler, once in the Virginia, wrecked on the Cuban coast, the mainmast has been completely removed, giving the ship the nondescript rig of square sails on the foremast and a fore and aft spanker and top on the starboard side, while the mainmast of the house serves as a bridge for the navigation officer.

The new engine is a "steepie compound" all right, being a very exceptionally strong for work in the ice, with every modern improvement, and is expected to give a speed of from eight to eight knots, equal to that of the fastest Newfoundland sealing fleet and nearly three times that possible with the discarded boiler and engine. The Windward, under the command of Mr. Peary, and proceeded north through the Straits of Belle Isle, touching at Godhavn and possibly at Upernivik, and will, with all the modern conveniences, reach Peary's headquarters and him about Aug. 1.

Material for Esquimos. Today the members of the Peary Arctic club and many guests visited the Windward, inspecting with much interest the quarters which Mr. Peary and Miss Peary will occupy on their northern voyage, and much more, the cabin in which they will be cramped long months imprisoned in the ice at Prayer harbor.

The little stateroom was also the home of Lieut. Peary, who, with Lieut. Amundsen, much smaller than the ordinary stateroom of an ocean liner, and was also the home of Mr. Jackson in his voyage to the north. Franz Josef Land, and in which Dr. Nansen made his return from his arduous and adventurous Arctic voyage. While the Windward is cramped, a semi-circular table in front of a transom of cushion, it will accommodate more than a dozen people, and of course those on the deck are unable to move until those nearer the ends of the semi-circle make room for them. The deck is occupied by the cabin, while six crowd uncomfortable and therefore part of the time of the visitors today was allotted to the deck and to the new deck chairs. The foredeck of the Windward were also busy today, since stores for a year and additional supplies for the Jensen station at Cumberland Sound were being effected, that the departure might be started at the earliest possible moment. The little ship was all bustle and activity, and the men, besides the customary stores and supplies, a large amount of material for the Esquimos, presents from Mr. Peary, and scientific instruments with which to carry on the deep sea work, and in many respects is better appointed and more completely equipped than any ship which has ever gone to the North.

Record of the Windward.

The Windward, a 320-ton barque, is easily the largest and most modern of all the Arctic craft now afloat. Built at Sunderland, Eng., in 1865, it was for more than a quarter of a century employed in the DeLong and Peterhead whale fisheries. Purchased in 1894 by Alfred C. Harnsworth, she took the name of the Peary Arctic Club, and was fitted for the expedition to Franz Josef Land, being imprisoned in the ice near Cape Flora for the winter.

The Windward, commanded by Capt. John Bartlett, sailed from New York for the North July 3, 1898; parted company with her consort, the Hope, Capt. Samuel Bartlett, for Etah, North Greenland, Aug. 12, and spent the following winter fast in the ice of Allman bay, breaking out early in August, 1899, and joining the Diann, the auxiliary ship at Etah, Aug. 12, returning to Brigus, N. F.

Extensive repairs were made to the hull and machinery early in the spring of 1900, and July 26, commanded by Capt. Samuel W. Bartlett, sailed from Sydney with Mrs. Peary on board, and after a long and arduous voyage, except a report from Godhavn Aug. 15, nothing further was heard from her until the arrival of the Erik, the auxiliary ship, at Etah, Aug. 4. The Windward had spent the eight months from September to July fast in the ice of Payer harbor, near Cape Sabine, and made a successful voyage, extracting himself in a successful walrus hunt in Ingfield gulf. Returning at the end of the season, practically under sail or three knots, with favorable wind and tide, the utmost that the engines could do, the Windward departed the harbor at Brigus, arriving in New York March 20.

What the Club Has Done.

The departure of the Windward seems to be a proper occasion for a brief statement concerning the Peary Arctic club, which has sustained Mr. Peary during the two expeditions, and which, when the subscriptions originally pledged have been all paid and expended, will renew its promise to support him and the work to be done by the club. It was made up of subscribers secured by Mr. Peary just before his departure in 1898, and was organized in January, 1899, and consisted of twenty-five men who would pledge to him and to each other, for annual contributions of $1,000 each, insuring the club with a capital of four years of its enterprise of $100,000. His departure was, however, compelled before the full number was secured, the club, as organized in January, 1899, was: President, Morris K. Jesup; vice president, Frederick E. Hyde, M. D.; treasurer, Henry W. Cannon; secretary, Herbert A. Bridgman, who, with the late James M. Constable, James J. Hill, E. C. Benedict, H. H. Benedict, H. Hayden Sands, E. W. Bliss, and the late George W. Peck, of the American Geographical society, were constituted founders. Messrs. Jesup and Hill each contributed a double portion of the capital, and have since renewed their full proportion for the fifth and present year. Edward G. Wyckoff and Clarence F. Wyckoff, of the Peary Arctic Club, New York, have also joined the club, and Frederick Constable, since his father's death, has completed and continued the subscription.

Other Vessels Sent Out.

The club has faithfully seconded at home all of Mr. Peary's efforts in the North; has sent the Hope, in 1898; the Diann, in 1899, and the Erik, in 1901, the second and last of the expeditions, and which, while spending nearly a month at Ingfield gulf, and brought home complete journals and records, and a large amount of scientific material, and returned from Fort Conger, and brought over 250 miles over the ice to Grinnell Land. The members of the club have the most unqualified faith in Mr. Peary's ability, and have undertaken the expensive outfit on the Windward this year with perhaps more enthusiasm than anything in his history. They recognize the fact that Mr. Peary's ample stores and the best dog foods, his thorough familiarity with the ice, and his complete command of quarters to Cape Hecla, the point of departure from the North American coast for the pole, give him great advantage in his quest, and the return of the ship early in September and have undertaken the expensive outfit on the Windward this year with perhaps more enthusiasm than anything in his history.

MAN WRESTLES WITH BULL AND CONQUERS HIM

Mexican Banded and With No Weapon Wins by Strength. There may soon come to the East a man from the West with the powerful strength of the Lydian giant who saved the life of Christ in the Vatican, and with the strength of his hands killed a bull in the Roman amphitheater.

One of the men from the West is no giant, as was Ursus. He is a swarthy Mexican, a cattle rancher, an athlete, little, wiry, strong. He does not fight to kill, but to conquer. He looks only fifteen years of age, and weighs but 175 pounds, while the bull which he defeated weighs fully 900 pounds. This time he met the beast in the history of the country that man and bull fought together in an encounter without weapons, and it seems curious that the man should have allowed the bull to place upon the other day at Terre Haute, Ind., under the auspices of the Order of Railway Conductors. Fully 5,000 people witnessed the struggle.

The bull, bellowing and resisting, was dragged into the center of the arena, where the Mexican, smiling while the men fearfully unloosed the thongs and fled to shelter. Before the dazed animal could recover from the shock, the man vaulted upon his back and clasped his arms tightly about the bull's neck. Then a terrible struggle took place. The man, with his feet on the bull's paws, pushing up masses of earth and shifting itself back and forth in an effort to dislodge the man on its back. Neromus, in the face of the man, was dashed to the ground. The multitude watched breathlessly. There were cries of "He's killed!" their faces and women began to cry hysterically. For one instant the Mexican lay dead. "He's killed!" shouted the audience. Then they caught their breath.

Even as the bull prepared to gore him with his horns, the man, with his lasso hissed through the air, and encircled the bull's neck. Then he drew the noose taut. The huge beast, in the effort to follow its captor meekly to the fences.

The athlete rested, while the bull, roused again to fury, was strapped with leather thongs, and was led into the ring and unbound. It was led by the man, and he, Neromus, alighted on its back and clung there with arms around its neck. He drew the bull toward the young man, and alighted heavily upon it. "He's crushed!" shouted the audience, but the wonderful muscles had resisted the strain. Springing up and away, the Mexican threw his lasso, and again the bull was made prisoner.

The last and third round the straps were unloosed, and the man, with his arms around the bull's neck, had been too great for Neromus, and he dared not compete unaided again for the prize. He again he clasped his arms around the animal's neck and struggled.

The bull stood as though planted in the ground, to the amazement of the audience. Neromus, with his powerful arms, lifted the bull bodily, gave him a sudden jerk, and the animal reeled over. Again Neromus performed this wonderful feat. Then, to prove that he had conquered, Neromus unbound the ropes and thongs, and handed them to assistants to carry out of reach.

The bull remained passive. Neromus alighted from its back and stood beside it. He drew the bull toward him. He passed his hand caressingly over its neck. It knew its master, and followed him from the ring. Neromus, with East and giving exhibitions of his remarkable prowess. There is said to be no brutality in the exhibition. It is a trial of skill and strength. No injury is done the bull, and Neromus declares himself able to look after his own safety.

It is a performance almost equal to the great one of Ursus, in "Quo Vadis."

SEA SNAKES INVADE A TOWN AND PEOPLE FLEE Are Amphibious, Frequently Hunt on Land and Are Venomous. Venomous reptiles are dreaded the world over, and cases might be cited from all parts of the globe. Reports of inhabited places having become desolate owing to their depredations. One such instance, however, stands out from all the rest, because of the completeness of the havoc wrought, but on account of the peculiar circumstances surrounding it.

In the first place, the reptilian invasion which was the immediate cause of the exodus was one of land serpents, but of sea snakes; or, rather, of sea snakes—the platyrus. This hideous creature swarms in the warm waters of the Persian gulf, and it has not been known to invade the sea snakes—frequently going on shore, for the purpose of sporting or hunting over marshy ground, has caused it to be generally avoided.

As a rule they carefully avoid the presence of man, but early in the spring of the year 1880 a solitary individual stands out from all the rest, because of the completeness of the havoc wrought, but on account of the peculiar circumstances surrounding it. As a day or two later, however, another individual stands out from all the rest, because of the completeness of the havoc wrought, but on account of the peculiar circumstances surrounding it.

TREASURE ISLAND.

On that white Caribbean Key, tucked under the hundred years. Rests in the keeping of the sea. The secret of the buccaners. Tarnished and soiled with rust and mold. Heap jeweled palmgrasses, musketeers, silks, sacraments and cranny. Any causing eventually, by the mere loathsomeness and horror of their presence, a wild and general stampede. Dead, that is to say, so far as human life is concerned, but very much alive in respect to the presence of a night after the late great daily of myriads of the horrible creatures, whose advent originally brought about its ruin.—Detroit News-Tribune.

Remember the torches' flare

When Blackbeard brought the chests ashore. Landmarked the spot and sunk them there. Beat back to sea—and comes no more. Unless, maybe, at black of night.

A phantom craft makes for the light. And anchors off the ghostly Key; And all the fierce dead fighting men From the deep-sea grave or gibbet-chain.

Riot upon the beach again. As when they bled the Spanish Main.

But when the dawn wind gives the sign Back to the sea, the fleet retire. Trailing along the shuddering brine A wake of effervescence fire. And silence, and a glow of light. Renew his endless reign alone. Pursed by the long tide rising roar. —F. L. Pollock, in Youth's Companion.
