THEY NEED A HAVEN INCAPACITATED DEACONESSES MUST BE SENT OUT OF CITY

Mrs. A. W. Dunning's Suggestion Before Home Missionary Workers, to Provide Homes for Methodist Nurses, Meets With Approval and Committee Is Appointed—Old Officers Are Re-Elected.

The Woman's Home Missionary society of the Minnesota conference of the Methodist Episcopal church desires a deaconesses' home in St. Paul.

"As it is now, when a deaconess becomes ill or in any way incapacitated for service, we have to send her away from St. Paul. I would suggest that an effort be made to get some individual or individuals interested in the work we are carrying on to donate a small dwelling house that we can use as a deaconesses' headquarters."

Mrs. Dunning's suggestion was favorably considered by the members of the conference and it was decided to appoint a committee, made up of one representative from each of the woman auxiliaries in the conference, and to request the ministers of those churches that have an auxiliary to appoint representatives to confer with the auxiliary representatives to look into the matter.

Officers Are Re-Elected. All the old officers of the society were re-elected, as follows: President, Mrs. John Grove; vice president, Mrs. Weston Hayward; second vice president, Mrs. A. W. Dunning; corresponding secretary, Mrs. W. O. Hillman; treasurer, Mrs. J. H. Fitz; secretary of supplies, Mrs. Helen M. Evans, of Hamline; assistant secretary, Mrs. Van Meter; secretary of mite box, Mrs. E. J. Dugan; secretary of young people's work, Charles Fox; librarian, Mrs. E. M. Berry.

Mrs. Roosevelt's Regret.

The Professional Woman's League has received the following reply to its letter inviting Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt to open the Woman's Exhibition: "Mrs. Roosevelt has handed me yours of the 12th instant, with inclosures, and has asked me to express her regret that owing to her engagements it will be impossible for her to accept the very kind invitation which you have been good enough to extend to her. She wishes me to assure you of her cordial appreciation of your thoughtfulness. Very truly yours, "Assistant Secretary to the President."

Preserved Citron.

Peel the citron and cut the rind into pieces of uniform size, rejecting the seeds. Make a thick sirup of sugar and water, then drain and lay in fresh cold water for seven hours, changing the water three times during that period. Drain, and put the citron on to boil in a gallon of water to which you have added two teaspoonfuls of alum. Stew until tender, drain and lay in cold water. Make a thick sirup of sugar and water and when it boils cook the rind in it for fifteen minutes. Remove the rind, pack in jars, add to the sirup the kettle enough lemon juice and ginger root to flavor it. When very thick fill the citron jars with the boiling sirup and seal.

JUST ABOUT WOMEN.

Miss Jane Scherzer, an Ohio young woman, who has just passed the doctor's examination in English philology at the University of Berlin, is the third American to pass this examination. Miss Scherzer formerly held the position of high school principal in her home town and was also principal of a college in Oxford, Ohio.

After half a century's opposition to women as co-laborers, the Watchmaker's Guild of Vienna, has awarded a certificate of competence to Gisela Elbuschitz, the first woman watchmaker to be recognized in the Austrian capital. The innovation is said not to be regarded with favor by the trade in general.

Miss Helen Kramer enjoys the distinction of being the only woman mail carrier in a rural delivery service in the state of Kentucky. Her route extends six miles out from Louisville. She formerly held the position of post-mistress at Shirley (a fourth-class office), and instead of salary was paid according to the number of stamps canceled at the office. Her income was not sufficient to support herself and her mother, and to supplement it she secured the agency for several newspapers. When the Shirley post-office was abandoned a short while ago she was given the route and its meeting with success in her new work.

The older girls in the public schools of Manchester, England, are going to be taught how to feed and rear babies. One of the members of the local school board—a woman—made the discovery recently that 88 per cent of the cripples in the city were deformed because of rickets, which had been brought about by the feeding and lack of attention. The new course of instruction, it is expected, will bring about a change for the better in the care and treatment of babies.

New Sweater for Athletic Girls. Among the smart wear in "sweaters" are hand-knit white wool ones, having a beautifully designed stripe raised from the separating stitches of plain knitting in light blue, green or red. This gives the sweater a vertical, consequently becoming to the figure. For a collar and cuffs to the bishop sleeve are wide bands of plain knitting in light blue, green or red. The Globe's Daily Short Story

A Short Story for an Idle Moment HER LADYSHIP—By Katharine Tynan.

Her ladyship had eyes like the most velvety brown pansy. His lordship was the proudest steepest, noblest gentleman imaginable. "She was proud, indeed, by right, being the granddaughter of old lady Warrender, the haughtiest and most exclusive woman in England, who had driven her son, poor Archie, away from her, said the middle-aged men who had been at Eton with Archie Warrender, the countess's father, and remembered his winning ways, his sunny curls, his frank and gentle eyes. Archie was dead, and had left her little girl to bring up—a soft, pale child with frightened brown eyes. He had married the daughter of a Devonshire parson. The old lady had not approved the marriage, and she and her son had parted. Now that the child's father and mother were dead, she was resolved to do her duty by Archie's daughter, and she had done it. The child always wore white, thick, creamy white, that made her eyes browner, her head more russet, her skin fairer, her soft lips redder. When her ladyship was seventeen, love sent his lordship, by accident, to the somewhat forbidding lodge amid gloomy woods where Lady Warrender was hiding away her pearl. "You have done very creditably," she said to the shrinking girl. Anyone who saw those brown eyes at that moment would have discovered fear in them. "But remember, he is immensely proud." All that was now over and done with. Lady Warrender was dead. Lord and Lady St. Austell had been married more than half a dozen years. They were more in love with each other than ever. Yet still her ladyship unconsciously of betrayal, revealed to the sympathetic gaze some trouble pushed out of sight. His lordship was too good a lover not to be aware of that intangible something which he had ascribed to the loss of the heir. Anyhow, he never spoke of it; but, when the loneliness of the brown eyes became more than he could bear, he took the hand of his ladyship's face between his two hands and look down into those shrinking depths, and then, with a low sigh, would bid her ladyship pack up and take Phyllis, her maid, with her, and be off to the quiet place in the West Country, which seemed to have a charm for her. It was the middle of the season, being June weather, with hardly a breath of air, when her ladyship had a longing to be gone to her little refuge under the cliffs of Porthoe. She had been looking white and exhausted, with purple rings about her eyes, and it was his lordship himself who suggested that she should go, and made light of the difficulties. He, too, would leave the gayeties behind, and take the yacht across to France. The desire for the sea, he said, he had in London when hot weather comes in was upon him, and he imagined what it was with her. The blind care down in St. Austell House. The yacht was getting up steam at Southampton. In a few hours more his lordship would be on board. He came in to find a shabby-looking letter on his table marked "important." He opened it, expecting to find a begging letter. The thing smelt rankly of impudence and impudence. When he had read it, he smiled contemptuously before setting a light to it in the grate. "What is the secret between your wife and your wife's maid?" it ran. "She is not at No. 7, The Beach, Porthoe, though her letters are received there. She is at Greenhurst Farm, Tremadoc, and passes for a single woman."
