DENTISTRY THAT SAVES THE TEETH. People laughed at Fulton, sneered at Morse, and pook-pooked Edison, yet the ocean greyhound is here, and the telegraph and phonograph. This is known as a progressive age, yet it is not so known as a progressive age, yet the general public very skeptically regarded statements only published in the columns as to the value of porcelain for a filling material. Dr. Cornwell, as is well known, was first and foremost (fourteen years since) in the practice of the method for the restoration of bad teeth, and long since publicly stated that in spite of its detractors porcelain was the best material to be the coming work in dentistry and that the dentist who would be an up-to-date man in his profession must necessarily incorporate this method into his practice. How stands the case today? Progressive dentists everywhere throughout the United States are striving to perfect themselves in the knowledge of how to manipulate porcelain for inlay work. All dental offices published in the interests and devoted to the advancement of the dental profession have their columns each month filled with discussions and papers relative to the beautiful results of this method, and the method yet devised of restoring bad teeth. One great fact that has forced itself on observant operators is that wherever cavities in teeth are filled with porcelain, decay at the margin of the cavity so filled does not take place, and this fact, however, was first made known in 1889 by Dr. Cornwell, he being the first dentist in the world to note this important and remarkable fact. All dentists are now aware that such an assertion can never be truthfully made of any metallic filling, whether of gold or amalgam. Dr. Cornwell gives an unqualified guarantee on this point. Porcelain is at once the most easily inserted and at the same time the most safe to work with, and it is filled away with large and unsightly fillings of gold in the front teeth. It is not cheap work, as some may suppose, neither does Dr. Cornwell cater to that class of practice; his plates and inlay fillings are not to be had at his office; such work only tends to degrade dentistry. It may also be said that it is unnecessary to charge the large fees customarily with the fashionable dentist. Dr. Cornwell's fees in view of his experience and ability to perform good dentistry are moderate. Crown and bridge work (teeth without plates) when indicated come next in value to one's natural teeth. For this work the dentist (the "smart set") charges too much; cap dentists don't charge enough. The price they quote would not pay for raw material of the proper quantity or quality. Samples of the work are shown at Dr. Cornwell's office. Honestly, experience and thoroughness are the three main points to be considered in selecting a dentist for this work. If you are wearing an artificial plate that does not fit well, see him; he will tell you where the trouble lies. No changes are made for examination. Dr. Cornwell's offices are at 410 and 412 Chamber of Commerce building, corner Robert and Sixth streets.
