THE TRAIL OF THE GRAND SEAGUE

By Olin L. Lyman. 7 Colored Illustrations.

The Brooklyn Eagle says: "The author has taken a number of legends that cling about the eastern end of Lake Ontario and has woven them into a stirring romance. He writes well—the style of the narrative holds easily the reader's attention. It is a novel of unusual quality."

Altogether it is in an original vein and is a remarkably well-told story.—Detroit Journal.

A story full of the most vivid interest.—N. Y. World.

Far above the average book. The author makes you feel as though you were actually there, living the life of the hero, and the author's portrayal is so fully and so touchingly portrayed.—Washington Post.

AMES VERDICT IS THE SOLE TOPIC

One of Judges Predicts Sentence Will Be at Least Five Years.

The young man that he would ever be... After a prolonged period of experimenting with massage experts, Hicock went to an overlying faith healer, who offered to extend the short leg to its proper length in a year for a certain sum of money. The amount of the conviction was paid in advance and the other half was to be paid when the leg had attained its proper state of development. It was also stipulated that the young man should have full use of the partially paralyzed limb.

Three months from the time that the heel began his treatment Hicock says the leg began to grow and within nine months it had been so lengthened that it was on an even footing. He also had comparative control of the limb, though there still existed a considerable difficulty in co-ordination.

At this stage of progression Hicock and his parents went to St. Paul, Minn., where they were treated by the work of the healer that they forwarded him $200, the balance of the amount agreed on for the cure. In a letter to the healer Hicock declared his conviction that the use of the leg would be restored to him and that he thanked his deliverer profusely.

But from this time forth the real trouble began. Instead of growing on an equality with the other leg, the healed leg continued to extend itself at an appalling rate, with the result that Hicock's right leg is now an inch and a half longer than his left one and it is still growing. Moreover, the paralytic condition appears to have been communicated to the left leg, and Hicock fears that his trouble has been merely transferred from one leg to the other.

An examination of the limb was made by two Minneapolis surgeons yesterday. It is the opinion of the surgeons that the trouble is due to intermittent paralysis. He is over six feet tall and still growing very rapidly. There is believed to be an unnatural pressure on one of the nerve centers of the spine, which has caused the arrest of growth that in one leg and then in the other. The idea that the machinations of the faith healer had anything to do with Hicock's predicament is scouted.

There is a probability that a minor surgical operation will relieve the pressure, which is alleged as the source of the trouble, and that Hicock may even yet be able to travel on well-matched legs.

ANOTHER AMES MAN ON TRIAL.

Superintendent of Poor W. H. Johnson Faces a Jury.

Another of the municipal corruption cases is now on trial before Judge Elliott.

William H. Johnson, superintendent of the city poor department, whose selection to that office was made by Mayor Ames, is on trial on the charge of misappropriation of funds. Judge John H. Eitel is the attorney for the defendant, and C. S. Jolly and William Leary are conducting the case for the state.

Johnson is charged with the appropriation of funds collected for the poor department to his own use. The case came up in the general municipal investigation after the books of Johnson had been examined by Ernest Rockwell, an expert accountant from Chicago.

The indictment alleges that on Sept. 12, 1902, the sum of $100 was received, which was not turned over to the city. The defendant claims that the money has not been turned to his own use, but that it has been the custom to hold out certain sums for the payment of contingent expenses. The money, it is claimed, has always been subject to demand.

A $3,500,000 STRUCTURE

To Be Erected in Washington for the National Museum.

Plans have been completed for the $3,500,000 structure to be erected for the National Museum in Washington, and bids for its construction will soon be called for. The regents of the Smithsonian Institution, after intending this work, and it is their idea when the new building is completed to have a complete rearrangement of the exhibits now in the museum, and the Smithsonian Institution building.

The new structure is to be devoted to the scientific collection of the government, the present National museum building to the industrial arts and the old Smithsonian building to the Smithsonian and National Museum library and art collections. The regents propose that the scientific collection in the new building will be the finest in the world, and an officer of the institution makes the statement that already many of the branches to be covered have reached a perfection that is not equaled in any other museum in the world, even the great British museum. The chief topics to be covered are biology, anthropology, geology, botany, and American history. The National Museum building will be given up to a great exposition of industrial art, including the already immense and unique collection in the museum, and many additions that the regents are planning to secure as rapidly as possible. The museum will be modeled in its scope and general character after the Victoria and Albert Museum of Great Britain. Among the chief departments will be those of land transportation, boat models, implements of war and electrical apparatus, of which the museum already has rich collections.

The plans for the Smithsonian building contemplate the creation in time of a magnificent library and art gallery. The scientific library of the institution is already one of the finest in the world. Its scope will be broadened and it will become a much more important unit in the general scheme of the institution. The plans for the art gallery are as yet tentative. The new structure will be 486 feet long and 345 feet broad, with a height of four stories.—Brooklyn Eagle.
