THE WEDDING INVITATION.

Woes of the Man Who Gets One and

A wedding invitation is practically an admission ticket, costing $20, to the church service; reception at the house afterward, extra; cards to the home more extra.

When a man gets an invitation nowadays he feels as he does when he has been served with a subpoena. He sputters about the idiosyncrasy of marriage in general, and wonders why in thunder, or somewhere else where thunder is unknown, those little fools didn't just stand up and get married and get it over with. Then, when he calms down he is inveigled into making an appointment with his wife at some jeweler's. There he is met with a bewildering array of silver trawls, meat saws and miniature pitchforks, which his learned wife explains to him are fish knives, lettuce servers and berry forks, respectively.

Then, as his eyes wander about the store, he spies a golden ball, perforated with fancy holes, and he ventures the facetious remark to his wife that they might take time by the forelock and send that baby's rattle. Which is met by the chilling rejoinder that "that" is a tea ball, and it is just the very thing. And so the man hands over the necessary and his wife directs where the golden tea ball shall be sent.

The feelings of a strong, healthy man being required to attach his card to a dinky tea ball and send it to a young couple as a mark of his good wishes for either expression or description—insurance. Frankly

Royal Ethics of Attitude.

Royalty now receives its guests standing, but down to a date comparatively recent kings and queens received sitting stiffly on their thrones, any marked change of posture being supposed to denote a change of the royal dignity. The ideal of a graceful sitting posture has varied in the different ages of the world. The Egyptians sat bolt upright, the knees and feet closely pressed together. It was the ceremonial attitude. The Greeks and Romans, when their seats had no backs and they were at liberty to forget their dignity, sat stooping, with one or both elbows supported by the arms of the chair. The Chinese identify with the knees and feet wide apart. They have maintained that attitude in sitting for 4,000 years. The Saxons and early Norman kings are represented in old manuscript and on coins in the same posture
