FOR and ABOUT WOMEN

FALCONRY IS NEW FAD

MEDIAEVAL SPORT IS TAKEN UP BY THE SMART SET

Summer Girl of England Has Pastime in Which Members of the American Colony Are Leaders—Care of the Birds Is a Great Fat Reducer.

Falconry, the fashionable sport of medieval times, has been revived in England and nearly all the American girls who have married Englishmen have taken it up. Lady Essex, the Duchess of Marlborough and Lady Hesketh are among those who have established hawking mews.

So the summer girl has a new fad for the new season and there is no sport more eminently suited to women than this for many reasons and its popularity will probably become far-reaching when it becomes known again. It is a splendid pastime for the young woman in need of physical upbuilding, for it not only takes her far afield, but the training of her hawk requires many hours in the open air every day, for the falcon must be car-

Jesses, lure, ruffhood and imbibing needles, for they are simply terms of falconry.

Athletics and Women's Dress Reform.

Athletics has achieved for woman's dress within two years what dress reformers vainly tried to accomplish for many generations. Woman is no longer slave to fashion, at least when it comes to attire for ordinary occasions, such as walking or shopping.

This reform—for reform it really is—has come about so gradually that it has not been generally noticeable. We now have the low-heeled shoe, with broad toe and thick sole; the loose, low corset, the ungloved hand and the short skirt. Few persons, however, realize that this attire changes the character of this transformation, nor do most of the women who themselves have been emancipated.

When women took up, one after another, walking, riding, cycling, tennis, rowing, swimming, golf and other sports, those who had feminine physical well being at heart rejoiced, for they felt that stronger muscles, better appetites, restful sleep and rosier complexions would result. But they never dreamed that this change of outdoor exercise would result in a dress reform. Yet it has, and they builded better than they knew.

Last summer they went out for strolls bareheaded. In Boston, the home of culture, they have gone down town without a headgear for two summers. This is due to athletics. When they played golf or tennis or rode a bicycle they wore short skirts. Hence the short skirt and absence of trains on the street. First came the rainy-day skirt on wet days, but now short skirts are generally worn. The shirt-waist owes its popularity to the tennis and cycling. The wide-brimmed hat, walking and the parents of the broad shoe with thick soles and low heels. General athletics has done for the loose corset, which allows freedom of the body.

Athletic women like to proclaim, indirectly, that they are athletic. If they have good figures they like to display them. They are proud of their biceps particularly. For some time tight sleeves have been in vogue. This season sleeves are worn looser, but only from just above the elbow down. Midway's sleeves at the biceps are tight in order to display her upper arm to advantage.

This feminine fondness for exercise has not alone resulted in a dress reform, but has developed muscles. Women have made creditable records in outdoor sports. At lots of New York girls shot big game. Hundreds of them are more than a match for the average strong male player in the outdoors. In Connecticut a young woman in a rowing match, and in Ohio for a chance to prove her assertion.

Miss Ethel Golding and scores of other girls in New York and Brooklyn can beat a majority of the swimmers of the opposite sex at either long or short distances.

Mrs. John Gerken, of New York, can drive a four-hand with the skill of a professional.

At the Vassar college field sports, recently held, five records were broken. Miss Agnes S. Wood ran fifty yards in 6.3-5 seconds, and 220 yards in 29.5-5 seconds. Miss Evelyn G. Gardner made a standing jump of 7 feet 7 inches and a running jump of 14 feet 6 1/2 inches. These performances broke all records. They are remarkable when it is considered that Vassar is without a cinder track and the advantage boys' colleges have and that the young women were loose and heavy speed-impeding costumes.

The manager of a big New York department store says women are wearing garments a full size larger than a few years ago. This especially applies to corsets, waists, gloves and shoes. He also said that fashion's decree, if there really is such a thing now as applied to outdoor dress, gave so much latitude that the stores were obliged to carry many times the variety of goods they formerly did.

The sterner sex has also been benefited by the decreed power of King Fashion, and nowadays a man can wear almost any kind of a costume he desires without attracting attention, provided, of course, he is not too pronounced in his tastes.

This increased latitude and these radical changes are welcomed by all, whether they be men and women who go in for athletics, people who are interested in dress reform or just plain, everyday mortals who like to dress as they please, unrestrained by fashion's dictates.

And the credit is all due to athletics. —J. Z. R.

Marriage in Russia.

As a daughter the Russian woman is under the absolute sway of her parents. The coming of age makes no alteration in her position. Until the day of her death, if she remains unmarried, the place she occupies in the family life is a place of dependence upon the will of her parents. When a woman marries she changes the authority of parents for the no less unqualified authority of husband. As the Russian statute suggestively puts it, "one person cannot reasonably be expected to fully satisfy two such unlimited powers as that of husband and parent." The "unlimited" power of the parent, therefore, is withdrawn and that of her husband substituted. She cannot leave him even to visit a neighboring town without a "pass" from him. He names the time for her to stay, and at the expiration of the term she is bound to return or get it renewed. A husband may appear in a court of law as a witness against his wife, but a wife is not permitted to appear against her husband. A woman's evidence is regarded also as of less weight than that of a man. "When two witnesses do not agree," the code runs, "the testimony of an adult outweighs that of a child, and the testimony of a man that of a woman."

According to the tenets of the Russian church, marriage is a sacrament, and is theoretically indissoluble. There is no such thing as a civil marriage and divorce, except in one case, is practically unobtainable by a woman. The exception is the deprivation of civil rights and banishment of the husband. If the wife chooses she can follow her husband into exile, and Russian law is full of pathetic stories of women, tenderly nurtured, braving the terrors of the long Siberian march. All children, however, born in exile are regarded as belonging to the lowest class of society. If, on the other hand, the wife seeks, on the plea of her husband's banishment, to leave the church in this case releases her discipline and grants the plea. Although the statute recognizes adultery and desertion on the part of the husband, the grounds for divorce, the law is beset with such difficulties that it is never resorted to except by the wealthy, who can always make the tardy wheels revolve even when the law is against them.

While divorce is more readily obtained in some parts of the empire, there are other means resorted to which reach the same destination, only by a different route. Laws in Russia are made not to be annulled if any individual and both the civil and ecclesiastical authorities have learned of the art of evasion to perfection. Marriages may be annulled if any informality has occurred in them, and if parties are willing, the rest is only a question of money. In some parts of the empire the marriage service is enacted with this contingency in view. The certificate may be left undated, or the age of the contracting parties omitted. In some parts of Little Russia a relative, during the ceremony, gives the bride a slap, to prove in case of need that she has married under compulsion. Women who succeed in obtaining a separation from their husbands on the ground of informality are married again, and may even be separated again without loss of position. There is, however, a more healthy "strong spirit" arising, which tends to the general favor of an adjustment of the present laws.—Westminster Review.

Attractive Song Recital.

Six of the pupils of Miss Jennie Pinch, vocal teacher, gave a song recital last evening in Odeon hall. The stage was prettily decorated and the students' capabilities and which served admirably to show the quality of their voices. The audience was limited to thirty. Miss Pinch and her pupils, Miss Bessie A. Godkin, were the soloists. Those who took part in the programme were: Misses Suzanne Kirby, Anna Blom, Ada Coombes, Mrs. M. Herschler, J. H. Nason and H. C. Palmer.

ried on the flat for exercise and flown to the lure. And for the woman who has too much flesh, there is no anti-fat quack medicine which would compare with this sport as a fat reducer. The eyes, as the young bird is called, requires a great deal of daily care, training and attention. It must be fed at regular intervals, bathed in the morning and put in the mews at night. Every day the bird must be "weathered on his block" and his feathers must be kept in perfect order. If one of these should be broken a perfect feather from an old skin must be inserted by an imbibing needle, an operation, if properly done, that is painless to the hawk and results in as good an appearance as the original feather. As there are, as yet, but few trained falcons in this country, and these imported, training one's own bird is more than half the sport. But it requires time and patience, though one is fully repaid in the end, as the maiden on falconry bent will find in the fall when she goes forth to hunt with a well-trained falcon on her gartered wrist. In former days all, both poor and rich, hunted with falcons. Even those who did not care about the sport themselves, kept falcons for the purpose of entertaining the nobility. Gentlemen and ladies rarely appeared in public without falcons on their wrists and they even took them to church with them, while they attended divine services.

So falconry is likely to become a formidable rival for golf and tennis. It has just that amount of charm and romance about it which at all times is dear to the heart of woman, no matter how sportsmanlike she wishes to appear. So when you pay a visit to your friends in the country this summer, one of the first things you will see, perhaps, will be a row of falcons perched on blocks on the lawn, each block standing in the middle of a circular bed of sand. These handsome birds will at least make a striking appearance, and be not surprised if your hostess talks learnedly about eyes, Carriageway Causes a Feud.

It is curious the manner in which family quarrels become public property. It is now an assured fact that George W. Vanderbilt and his sister, Mrs. William Douglas Sloane, are not on the best terms, and this row is attested by the massive porte cochere at the Vanderbilt house at Fifth avenue and Fifty-first street. For years this house and Mrs. Sloane's, next door, have been called the "Twin Vanderbilt houses," and they were linked by a splendid conservatory. Both houses were in the Venetian style of architecture. But now all is changed. Contrary to her sister's wishes, George Vanderbilt has renovated, or rather rebuilt his house, and cut off his sister's view by the new bulky carriage-way. Hence the feud. Mrs. Sloane has complained to the building department and Vanderbilt has been commanded to remove the obstruction. The appearance of the "twin houses" is changed hopelessly, much to Mrs. Sloane's displeasure. It is said Mrs. George Vanderbilt is responsible for the rebuilt mansion. She is only happy when superintending a new home.

Judging from the many quarrels of the Vanderbilts, they are not the most peace-loving family in New York. Only Mrs. Webb and Mrs. Trombly held aloof from these quarrels, while their brothers and sisters and nephews and nieces fought merrily on. They have never interfered with the affair of Cornelius Vanderbilt and his father, now dead. When young Cornelius was disowned and frowned upon by his immediate family his aunts did not let him in his ostracism. Tactfully they ignored the internal bickerings. This "Vanderbilt feud" is now celebrated and threatens to last forever. Even the dangerous illness of Cornelius last winter did not reconcile him to his people. The feud was caused by his marriage to Miss Grace Wilson, a young woman of talent, who was not approved by the elder Vanderbilts.

Although not so conspicuous or bitter as the Vanderbilt strife, the estrangement between the three Belmont brothers is increasing each year. Perry and Augustus are pitted against O. H. P. Belmont, because O. H. P. puts his wife to receive an allowance from William K. Vanderbilt, her former husband. This is galling to the pride of the other Belmonts. When Perry Belmont married Mrs. Sloane she returned to her former husband all the gifts she had ever received, and decided her real estate in trust to her children by Mr. Sloane. Since the quarrel caused by divorce and marriage, O. H. P. has fought Perry in society. In the latter battleground Mrs. O. H. P. has been victor. Nowdays the two Mrs. Belmonts may pass each other in the park without a nod. Both are intently gazing at the sky.

There is a formula to distinguish the fashionable folk at a summer dog show. A woman who wears ill-fitting unadorned linen clothes (you can't tell them from the dog) is a shapely but is of the elect. She is ultra-fashionable if she wears three thicknesses of clothes and an eccentric looking hat is bound to be a fashionable one. A monocle and thin legs indicate extraordinary social position.

There is an acceptable reason why women of fashion dress so plainly at the races. They began the season wearing abroad coaches and wearing the most billowy and alluring chiffons and laces. They really wore "confections" and "dreams." No sooner did they parade their fine feathers at Morris Park than several thousand of the Tenth Avenue "ladies" caught the fact, and the astonishment of the fashionables may be understood when they found their hats copied and their gowns mimicked by the other class of women in a week's time. These two classes never talk alike, so the women in society beat a hasty retreat behind tailor gowns and plain and even frocks. Laces and furbelows are given over to the other class, during the racing season at least.

It will contain a write-up of the contest, the prize winners and their pictures.

The Feminine Autograph Fieud.

The feminine autograph fiend now turns her attention to special collections. The matine girl cherishes a taste for the signatures of dramatic stars only while the book club girl patiently stalks the autographs of none but authors, and the golf girl gathers up the precious pen strokes of the long shot, putting and tournament champions. The daughter of one of our ambassadors has all but completed a unique and valuable collection of autographs of the crowned heads of the world. The signatures of seven African kings, the Czar of Russia and even the Sultan of Sulu are counted among her authentic autographs of living sovereigns.
