

SAINT SENDS 62,000 PEOPLE TO FAIR

Continued From First Page. Only come out and shine for us we will break the record. Old Sol was accommodating and so thoroughly bent his energies that by 1 o'clock the muddy roads and streets inside the grounds were broad, dry walks. At 2 o'clock the additional promenade facilities they offered were needed. The crowd was there to use it. Local pride vied with general interest in appreciation of the best programme offered by the fair management, and altogether they splendidly succeeded in making it a record smasher—the great day of a great fair—the day that hung St. Paul's banner with the laurels and made successive prize winning Minneapolis days fade into comparative insignificance. It was the Saint's big day and he made the most of it.

INDUSTRIAL PARADE DELIGHTS A MULTITUDE

The best show of the week was given to the best crowd. A multitude saw the live stock parade; the South St. Paul industrial parade; the best racing card of the week, including the $5,000 St. Paul purse race; the South St. Paul Derby; the fair and its participants in every department on their motto and dress parade. The afternoon was as nearly perfect as the most enthusiastic city partisan could wish. The sun shone warm and a pleasant breeze blew throughout the day. Thanks to the showers of Thursday, there was no dust for the management to combat, and the big crowd could not have secured better weather conditions for the fullest enjoyment of the fair. The early morning did not augur well for a record-breaking day. The wind was cold and the streets in bad condition as a result of Thursday's rain. But nothing could daunt patriotic St. Paul. The early cars were crowded, and at noon they were jammed—a condition which prevailed from that time until the last of the tired but thoroughly satisfied citizens of St. Paul was delivered in town in the early hours of this morning. Up to 11 o'clock the managers did not believe that St. Paul would brave the chill and threatening weather in anything like record-breaking numbers. The crowd pair of record-breaking numbers, but nothing like the rush which set in at noon was expected. Then the cars, which had been loaded beyond anything like a comfortable capacity for three hours, became very hot. The cars, which had been loaded beyond anything like a comfortable capacity for three hours, became very hot. The cars, which had been loaded beyond anything like a comfortable capacity for three hours, became very hot.

STREET RAILWAY TAXED BEYOND ITS CAPACITY

Thousands unable to pack themselves into the earlier cars waited down town for the South St. Paul industrial parade and then got to the fair grounds as fast as possible. Despite the best endeavor of the street car company many did not reach the grounds until the race card was half finished and as many more reached the grounds only to see the cowboys' Derby on the afternoon card. There was scarcely a perceptible let-up at supper time, and while the cars bound cityward were crowded from 5 o'clock there was no apparent slackening of the crowd on the grounds until the night show had come to a glorious pyrotechnic finale with the burning of Rome. When the 'down' town business houses closed at noon in honor of St. Paul day, the rush became a crush. The car service maintained on a one-minute schedule until the very quarter, ever given St. Paul by the Twin City Rapid Transit company, but it was inadequate to the accommodation of the crowds that came from every quarter. Many of the hundreds released from the shops and stores did not wait for their luncheons in town, but started at once for the fair grounds. This was well for the later crowds, but it was wise many of those who managed to reach the grounds in time to see part of the racing on run off would have seen only the evening programme. Everything gave way for the triumphant inaugural of St. Paul day. The Shorthorn sale was postponed until after the live stock parade and every one connected with the fair turned his entire attention to giving the Saint a cordial and befitting welcome.

SPECTATORS MASS IN EVERY VANTAGE PLACE

Before 1 o'clock the big morning crowds betook themselves to the grand stand, paddock, inside field, quarter-stretch field, the club house, the top of the big new machinery pavilion, filling every place of vantage from which the rather spectacular programme commencing with the live stock parade could be viewed wholly and in part. Before the head of the live stock procession appeared at the stretch gate, the grand stand, bleachers and paddock were crowded, the inside field was filled with carriages, wagons and equipages, from the stylish brougham to the big farm wagon, and all loaded. The quarter-stretch field held a bigger crowd than that which struggled to see Dan Patch cover his mile in 2 minutes. The Saint was glad and the board of fair managers smiled broadly. The Saint had broken the record and the management was busy counting the profits of an attendance, every admission ticket of which represented "velvet."

EQUINE ROYALTY HEADS THE PAGEANT

At 1:20 the sound of the bugle announced the grand pageant which introduced the greatest programme of the week. Thousands of heads turned to the stretch gate where the band, playing an inspiring military air, swung into line in front of the six-hundred of splendid bays which led the parade. Behind them for more than a quarter of a mile extended the line of prize representatives of equine royalty. Following the line of the parade, followed first by the giants of the horse show. Big blacks, bays, browns, grays, bedecked with prize ribbons, followed in the parade, set off by their glossy coats, pranced their ponderous way down the stretch and passed the stand to the music of the band and the enthusiastic plaudits of a delighted crowd. After the big fellows came the hackneys, roadsters, ponies, draught horses and mules. Following the dashing Alton-Ethelwyn roadsters pranced the Consul Wilkyn and his family of blacks, acting the aristocratic part in equine life with a dash and vim which evoked and deserved the unstinted applause of the crowd. One of the most enjoyable features of the horse division was the pony section. Following the lead animal, draft or saddle horse, a long line of the smallest of the best horse show ever seen at Hamline. They came driven tandem in pairs, singly to carts and under saddle. The crowd, which had been down the quarter-stretch before the rear reached the stands, and the band went into the back stretch when the counter-march and shortened its pace to the unwieldy if majestic stride of the animated masses of beef rumbling along behind.

CHERS GREET THE CATTLE CAVALCADE

The cattle cavalcade was headed by Dean Liggett, of the state agricultural vision, superintendent of the cattle division, and behind him a long line of horse came the Herefords, lumbering their ponderous and deliberate way along the length of admiring and applauding the crowd. The officers of the National Hereford Breeders' association, in carriages, accompanied the division of lorry cattle, many of them fairly banked and prize ribbons won in competitive show. The officers of the American Shorthorn Breeders' association headed the division of lorry cattle, many of them fairly banked and prize ribbons won in competitive show. HORSEMEN MAKE A HANDSOME SHOW

The first division was composed of 100 handsomely uniformed men, every one of them a rider and mounted on horses that at the touch of spur could dash around the course in the lead of a fair proportion of the crowd. The running races on the regular card. The new uniform of the riding club was an instantaneous hit with the big crowd. The fine, fitted, blue, showed to superb advantage in the blue-tight-fitting military blouses and decorated corsetry trousers, striped with broad stripes of black, and through military patent leather riding leggings. The costume was completed by uniform military collars and broad fawn-colored sashes. Each rider carried a light-colored stock whip, bedight with light-colored ribbons, and every horse pranced along on the bit as proud as his rider had a right to be. The column moved slowly to the grand stand, the riders in column of two. They were followed by a dozen attractively arranged floats, typical of the commercial interests of South St. Paul and with particular reference to the dressing of beef and the numerous products of the live stock industry. The place of honor was given a neat float, the side banners of which announced that in 1902 the South St. Paul interests paid $21,000,000 for the market and stock raisers of the West and Northwest tributary to St. Paul. A complete circuit of the mile track was made when the rider gave the starter's signal, the horsemen formed in column of fours and dashed at a gallop down the stretch to the gate leading to the inside field. Band wagon and floats joined in the spirited dash, and once the broad field gained, became the center of a whirlwind of dashing riders, displaying a verve and abandon typical of the Western horseman. Then came the big 2:13 pacing race for a purse of $500, put up by the business men of St. Paul, a big racing card of both harness and running events; the crowning event of the day, the 100-yard dash, and the big crowd began again to fight good-humoredly for places on the stand, bleachers or standing room in the paddock. The streets intersecting the show buildings and the buildings themselves presented a scene of animation never before equaled at Hamline. The main street and the intersecting streets leading to the stand on the north, the cattle crowd on the west, and the gates to the east were veritable seas of humanity. People got about with difficulty and traffic to horses on the main streets was next to impossible. It was a big day for St. Paul, a big day for South St. Paul and the biggest kind of a big day for the Minnesota State Fair association.

CROWD SUBMERGES ALL THE GROUNDS

Between 5 and 6 o'clock, after the performances in front of the grand stand were concluded, and until the big crowd began again to fight good-humoredly for places on the stand, bleachers or standing room in the paddock, the streets intersecting the show buildings and the buildings themselves presented a scene of animation never before equaled at Hamline. The main street and the intersecting streets leading to the stand on the north, the cattle crowd on the west, and the gates to the east were veritable seas of humanity. People got about with difficulty and traffic to horses on the main streets was next to impossible. It was a big day for St. Paul, a big day for South St. Paul and the biggest kind of a big day for the Minnesota State Fair association. At the close of the track events in the afternoon the big crowds in the stands and fields crowded into the exhibits out of doors and sheltered by the score of big buildings. It was St. Paul day, and the children of the Saint were out to see and be seen. The crowd that could be crowded into one day altogether too short for a visit to more than half the attractions offered.

ALLEGED MONOPOLY ON ST. LOUIS GAS RANGES

Attorney General Begins an Injunction Against the Gas Light Company. ST. LOUIS, Mo., Sept. 4.—An injunction proceeding was instituted today by Attorney General Crow to regulate and control the price of gas ranges manufactured and sold in St. Louis. The Gas Light Company was recently sold to the North American company, of Philadelphia, which is capitalizing $600,000. The petition for an injunction charges that the Gas Light company served notice on all St. Louis manufacturers that their ranges would have to be sold at a certain price, and that the company would refuse to make connections for charge. A temporary injunction, restraining the Laclede Gas Light company from charging the Majestic Range company, on whose contract the city is bound, a higher rate for maintaining gas connection with stoves or heaters of its manufacture than the rate charged for other ranges for the same service, was granted. The order further says that such higher charge shall not be made any other of the public of St. Louis, the effect being to prevent the gas company from discriminating against any other concern or person.

CONSULS MUST BE FIT FOR THEIR WORK

President Roosevelt Decides Upon a Change in Appointment Policy. OYSTER BAY, N. Y., Sept. 4.—An important change is being made with respect to the making of appointments in the consular service. It has been decided on by President Roosevelt. He discussed the change today with the Secretary of State, Francis B. Loomis. For many years it has been almost the uniform practice of presidents to appoint men to positions substantially higher than their own. This policy has been followed in the consular service. President Roosevelt, after consultation with Secretary Hay, Assistant Secretary Loomis, and the State cabinet not immediately identified with the state department, has determined to appoint hereafter to important positions in the consular service men who are at least equal to the positions which they will render them the more capable of filling the duties of higher positions with intelligence. The change in the policy does not extend the civil service to the consular service and it does not extend, necessarily, the famous New York lawyer, particularly interested in the extension of the country's foreign trade, to important consular positions will be filled by men who are at least equal to the positions which they will render them the more capable of filling the duties of higher positions with intelligence. SECRETARY SHAW REPRIMANDS FARMERS

Declares That Agriculture Has Not Kept Pace With Other Industries. COLUMBUS, Ohio, Sept. 4.—Secretary of the Treasury Shaw delivered an address this afternoon at the state fair grounds in Columbus, Ohio, in which he declared that agriculture had not kept pace with other industries, saying: "The farmers in adjoining states, and in this state, are not getting the same returns for their crops as they used to get. The cost of their crops is increasing, and the price they receive is falling. This is a serious situation, and it is one that must be remedied. The government has a duty to see that the farmers are not unfairly treated, and that their interests are protected. I have taken steps to do this, and I will continue to do so. I have reprimanded the farmers for their failure to keep pace with other industries, and I will continue to do so.
