CITY NEWS OHAGE GIVES ORDER TO CLEAN THE STREETS

Health Commissioner Says the Work Is a Sanitary Necessity, and on This Ground the Street Cleaning Department Proceeds at Once to Get Busy-Clouds of Dust Raised by the Sweepers Last Night.

Yesterday Dr. Ohage Informed City Engineer Rundlett that the streets in the business district would be cleaned. Mr. Rundlett demurred. He informed Dr. Ohage that he did not have any money with which to do the work.

"I order you to do It," said Dr. Ohage. "I demand that it be done for sanitary reasons," he added. "The health of the city is involved and the bills will have to be paid." "But the charter-it will not permit Rundlett. "Never mind the charter," answered Dr. Ohage. "We can't stand on formalities when good health is at stake. Just remember I order you to do it. If you don't I will."

such an expenditure," expostulated Mr.

This all took place at a conference held yesterday between Dr. Ohage, Mayor Smith and City Engineer Rundlett, and was productive of results to the extent that Dr. Ohage's command to clean was obeyed by Mr. Rundlett

A crew of men was put to work and as much of the paved streets as practicable cleaned. In order to keep lown the dust sprinkling was tried, but it was a failure, as the water froze almost as soon as it touched the ground. The work was accordingly delayed as late as possible so as not to discommode pedestrians with the clouds of dust that unavoidably arose.
Oil as a remedy for the dust was at first proposed, but it could not be used on the asphalt. In despair the depart-ment put the sweepers to work on the dry streets, and though much dust was raised the streets today look much better than they did yesterday.

Where the health of a community is at stake the power of the health officer at stake the power of the health officer is considered almost supreme. If it is necessary for him to act, the city must pay the bill. There is no alternative.

Dr. Ohage says he thinks the present filthy condition of the streets demands his interference and he proposes to back up the engineering department in an attempt to remedy the evil. He informed Mr. Rundlett that while he wanted the streets cleaned he would not permit any sprinkling while the thermometer hovered near the freezthermometer hovered near the freezing point. He said it would make the streets slippery and endanger the lives positive that Calderone was in his place three hours Thursday afternoon, and so informed the police when he learned that Calderone was wanted in connection with the murder.

Makes Significant Remark.

Branka and Calderone, according to I Branka, conversed in reference to the murder, of which Branka had not previously known. Calderone informed the saloonkeeper been murdered, and told some of the circumstances. He concluded with the significant remark:

"The man who done it has not been Branka and Calderone shook dice and drank together, and finally Calderone left, saying that he would be back in the evening.

Shortly after Branka was informed of the details of the murder and that Calderone was wanted. Branka then reported to the police that he expected Calderone to return in the evening, and Patrolman Joseph Pugleasa was de-tailed to wait at the saloon for Calderone. But the suspect did not put in an appearance, and he was not seen about the place yesterday. Branka says that he thinks Calde-rone's hand was bandaged, but is not positive. As he had no reason to suspect anything wrong, he took no ac-count of the circumstances at the time. He is, however, of the opinion that one hand or one finger was band-

The fact that Conductor 392, of Minneapolis, reported to the police that he recollected having seen, shortly after the time of the murder, an Italian on his car with a bandaged hand, is taken to correspond with the fact that Calderone was afterwards seen in St. Paul with his hand bandaged. Calderone is supposed to be the same man.

Believe Two Men Fled to St. Paul. Believe Two Men Fled to St. Paul.

As the man who walked from Minneapolis to St. Paul, leaving the tell-tale blood tracks, is supposed to have been badly wounded, and as a description of this man does not correspond to a description of Calderone, further evidence is lent to support the theory that two participants in the deadly affair are in St. Paul.

The man who attempted to mineapolish

The man who attempted to gain an en-The man who attempted to gain an entrance to Cesti's shoe shop on Raymond avenue, -near University, Wednesday night was seen by A. J. Cole, 621 Glendale avenue. Mr. Cole, who is an engineer at one of the Minneapolis mills, was waiting for a car to take him to work, when the wounded man attracted his attention by pounding at the door of the small shoe shop.

The man pounded loudly at the door, tried the window, and as there was a light burning within, seemed anxious to attract the attention of the occupant. After repeated efforts to gain admittance, he finally gave up the attempt and started towards University avenue. Seeing Cole, he turned into the street and walked down the cycle path towards St. Paul. The man was, according to Cole's description, short and rather stout and wore a black overcoat, which was open, notwithstanding the cold weather which prevalled at the time. As Cole caught but a glance of the man, and as he paid to particular attention to him, he is unable to give a description, but says he might be able to recognize him. Calderone is large and stout.

Police Search in Vain.

Working on the theory that the men wanted are in St. Paul, the police of this wanted are in St. Paul, the police of this city searched everywhere they might be found, but were unsuccessful. Both Calderone and Battalia had many friends in St. Paul, and most of them were visited. Probably, through fear of the Mafia, or through the natural reticence of the people, the police were unable to learn anything of the whereabouts of the men. Patrolman Pugleasa, with Detectives Daly and Sweeney, searched all resorts where they might have taken refuge. The police now think that the men are being closely concealed, and are resolved to maintain a constant watch and will not give up their search. give up their search.

A humorous incident of the search in St. Paul occurred yesterday when two Minneapolis sleuths discovered on Sherburne avenue a trail of blood which they followed to a house at 600 Robert street. Thinking that they had at last found the place of refuge of the murderer, they spotted the house and went for a St. Paul detective with when they returned and started a search of the premises. Inquiries among the occupants developed nothing, but the detectives were not content till they went upstairs and found that a Jewish family resided there. The blood stains had been produced by an innocent duck which had been slain by the rabbi for the Sabbath feast.

Knows of No Mafia Here.

Knows of No Mafia Here.

Though the police are inclined to believe that the murder was instigated and carried out by members of the Mafia, Italians will not admit that such an organization is in existence in the Twin Cities. Rev. S. N. Odone, who conducts services for the Italian families of St. Paul, when seen last night said that he had no knowledge of any local branch of this famous organization.

"I am sure that there is no such society in St. Paul, but I will not say whether there is or not in Minneapolis. There are but twelve Sicilian families in St. Paul, while there are many more in Minneapolis. The murder was a terrible affair, and I hope the offender will be brought to justice. I did not know either of the merit though I may have met them." Knows of No Mafia Here.

The theory that Salvadore Battalia wts The theory that Salvadore Battalia wts done to death by two men on the Franklin avenue bridge Wednesday night, and that the missing Antonio Calderone is not the only suspected murderer, is considerably strengthened by a street car conductor on the Minnehaha avenue line, named A. D. Souci, residing at 655 Fourth avenue northeast, who got off his car at Twenty-seventh and Franklin avenues Wednesday night just about the time the murder is supposed to have been committed.

or these, he says, were young men, and the third was a man apparently about 40 years old.

He has seen the newspaper pictures of Battalia and Calderone, and thinks he recognizes them. He describes Calderone as a man who was considerably larger than the other two, and wore no overcoat. He sat between the two other men and paid the fare of all three.

The conversation between the men was in a foreign language and was at times quite earnest. That is all he remembers about them. He will be shown Battalia's body this morning before the burial.

A patrolman named Daly, who was also on the car, is said to have remembered the party of three Italians, and his impression as to their identity is similar to that of Souci. He could not be found last night, but it is believed that he has imparted his information to the police.

DISCUSSES FEDERAL IRRIGATION PROJECTS

Chairman George H. Maxwell, of the National Association, Addresses St. Paul Business Men on the Benefits to Be Derived by Business Interests in General From Making Productive Vast Areas of Land Now Arid.

On invitation of Benjamin F. Beards ey, general secretary of the National Irrigation association, twenty-five business men were entertained at luncheon yesterday at the Commercial club, to meet George H. Maxwell, executive chairman of the association. Mr. Maxwell was passing through the city to confer upon matters relating to the work in North Dakota with Maj. Plumley, of that state, and advantage was taken of the opportunity to have him meet some of the people of St. Paul, meet some of the people of St. Paul, and to have them hear from him of the importance the progress and the future of irrigation interests.

Mr. Maxwell was introduced by President Smith, of the Commercial club, and spoke with great enthusiasm and complete knowledge of his subject. He said, in part:

"I am glad to comply with a request to interest the business men of this city in irrigation efforts, to tell them what will be done and to show them how deeply their own interests are involved. Great projects, as you all volved. Great projects, as you all know, are now under way. The irrigation fund already amounts to $16,000,000, enough to carry out the plans under way for perhaps two xears to Funds Should Be Used Where Raised.

"By far the greatest contributors to this fund, derived from the proceeds of public land sales, are the states of North Dakota and Oregon. The big enterprises contemplated are outside of the limits of those states, and the peothe limits of those states, and the people of North Dakota are in favor of a practice that will permit the funds accumulating under the irrigation law to be expended where they are raised. "You may suppose that, as one interested in the whole great irrigation scheme, I would look upon this with disfavor. On the contrary, it meets with my hearty approval. The irrigation projects to which the country is wisely committed are of enormous magnitude. In the valleys of the Columbia, the Yellowstone, the Snake, the Sacramento and the Colorado there are tens of millions of acres that may Sacramento and the Colorado there are tens of millions of acres that may be reclaimed by projects that will cost from $10,000,000 to $50,000,000 each. An underestimate of the population which these reclaimed lands will support is 50,000,000 people. And the land so prepared for cultivation will be worth immediately from $100 to $500 per acre.

"These great works will be carried through eventually by a larger policy on the part of the general government. The proceeds of public land sales would never be adequate. The government will prosecute them by the aid ment will prosecute them by the aid of direct appropriations, charged up against the irrigation fund, and repaid Batallia's funeral is set for this afternoon. His body lies at his brother's home, 1003. Western avenue.

The two knives were found by detectives yesterday morning at the opposite end of the Franklin avenue bridge in the center of which the murder is supposed to have been committed. One was a bowie knife, the blade of which was broken off about two inches from the handle. It is supposed to have belonged to the dead man, as it could not have inflicted the wounds found upon his body. It was discovered among some leaves near the east end of the bridge. The handle is smeared with blood.

The other knife is a stiletto, or dagger, with a blade nine inches long, the point of which is broken off. This was found lying near the river's edge beneath the western end of the bridge. It, too, was bespattered, and there were stains on the bridge above that would indicate that it had been flung away by some bloody hand.

It was these stains that caused the detectives to go below the bridge and look to see what the dripping of blood might point to. It is presumed that the dagger was thrown away by Batallia's murderer when he fled in the direction of St. Paul, and it is significant that it answers to the description given of a knife that Cal-stone acts. The irrigation fund will not suffer. Its receipts from these sources are not worth considering. But sources are not worth considering. But the opportunity which they afford for fraudulent appropriation of the very lands that we are seeking to recover must be taken away. These are the areas that irrigation will make most valuable, and their alienation must be prevented.

"There is another phase of irrigation that is too little understood. Men think of it generally as the reclaiming of ac-tually desert and unproductive land. But an absolute control of the water supply will enhance the productiveness and increase the value of other lands. Take North Dakota, for example. All that she contributes to the fund could be expended most profitably within her boundaries. If land can be what is called "winter-flooded;" that is, if it can be saturated with water before it freezes in the fall, then the moisture is there when the seed is planted in the spring, and there can be no fear of drought. With ditches to carry off the excess and irrigation canals to supply

Instances of General Benefit. In answer to a question relating to the direct interest of St. Paul business men in these projects, Mr. Maxwell referred to the experience of Los Angeles and Omaha. In the former city, though the areas to be firigated are not directly tributary to it, the business men stated that the making of the surveys had so increased their trade by the demand for supplies that they had derived great benefit, and that they therefore saw that the actual that they therefore saw that the actual construction work would add millions to their commerce. Omaha also expected that her population would double in ten years and her business grow correspondingly through the completion of irrigation projects on the North Platte. "What," asked Mr. Maxwell, "may not the merchants of St. Paul reasonably expect, not only from the carrying out of these gigantic plans, but from the settlement of tens of millions of new people in the country tributary to it commercially?"

Mr. Maxwell's remarks were listened to with great interest and received derone, the missing suspect, was known to have carried.

Evidences of Two Assailants. Besides the bloody handkerchief found near the trail which led in the direction of St. Paul, a piece of a bloody rag was also found along a third trail of blood, which would indicate that there were two assailants who attacked Battalia. This trail is really a continuation of the dripping of blood which was followed Thursday to a meat market at 2504 Riverside, where a pool of blood was found inside a storm pool of blood was found inside a storm

Yesterday the trail was picked up again and led out Riverside to Fifth street, on Fifth street to Eighth avenue south past the morgue, and out Sixth avenue to Ninth street, and then back into "Hell's Half Acre" and then down Sixth street to Second avenue south to Fourth street, where it was lost again. At Sixth street and Ninth avenue a bloody rag was found, which appeared to be a piece of a hand-kerchief which was marked with the letter "H."

ter "H."

While the Italians of Minneapolis scout the theory that the murder was the result of the Mafia, the penalty of an oath-bound society whom Battalia had offended, they have offered no other motive for the murder than that Battalia had quarreled with Calderone and his brother Phillippe Battalia, and had argued with others over his intention to forswear his allegiance to his native country and to join the Masons.

Masons.

A witness has been found who says that about 8 o'clock Salvatore Battalia came to the house at 1001 Western avenue, and Antonio Calderone was there. Battalia said he was going to join a Masonic lodge that night, and Calderone attempted to dissuade him. Batallia left the house, and Calderone went five minutes later.

the house, and Calderone went five minutes later.

This bears out the theory that Caldorone joined Battalia and a third man, composing the party of Italians who boarded the Minnehaha car, who are remembered by Conductor Souci.

The finding of bloody trails leading from the Franklin avenue bridge in the direction of St. Paul and back to Minneapolis fits in with the theory that two men attacked and fought Battalia to his death.

Struggled on the Bridge.

There are indications of a struggle on the bridge, in addition to the circumstance that the blades of both knives found near the bridge are broken. There are the marks of bloody fingers on one of the supports of the bridge.

J. W. Donahue, who stumbled over Battalia's body and gave the alarm, says that the lights were out, which ordinarily burned, as he had noticed in crossing the bridge nightly, and it is reasonable to suppose that Battalia had been lured to the bridge to be stabbed to death in the darkness. Struggled on the Bridge.

The blood found on the floor of the bridge has been analyzed and pronounced to be arterial blood, and that it was sprinkled about so profusely would indicate a struggle with more than one assailant. Calderone was about 25 years old, and a young man of large stature. He had come to Minneapolis from Winnipeg in March and had resided with several Italians at 1001 Western avenue.
