STRUCK SPEECHLESS

Paralyzed Driver Accuse Cook of Assaulting Him.

Paul Juckel, chef at the Aquarium cafe, 387 Robert street, who, to vary the monotony of life, jumped from the Wabasha street bridge about two years ago, is accused of striking George Forrester, a bakery driver, and knocking him speechless.

Forrester, who drove a delivery wagon for the Gieseler Bakery company, was found in the alley back of the cafe yesterday morning at 10 o'clock in an unconscious condition by Patrolman Hurley. The police ambulance was summoned and an examination by the physician in charge after Forrester had been revived revealed that the man had lost the use of his vocal organs.

Forrester was taken to his home, 410 Fort street, where he was attended by Dr. J. C. Christison. After working over the injured man Dr. Christison said that he seemed to be suffering from paralysis. Forrester could not use his right arm nor his right leg, and was unable to speak. In the afternoon, replying to an inquiry, Forrester wrote with his left hand on a sheet of paper a few words saying that he had been struck by the cook at Brenda's cafe. This was reported to the police and an investigation followed.

Paul Juckel was taken to the Central station, where he was held pending an investigation. He was released last night on his own recognizance to appear this morning. He says that Forrester came to the cafe yesterday morning to deliver a certain number of loaves of bread as usual, and that a dispute arose between himself and Forrester.

"He had been drinking," said Juckel, "and after he gave me the bread would not let me O. K. the bill. I demanded that he let me mark the bill, telling him that Mr. Brenck would not pay it if I did. Then he became violent and seized a carving knife, which he brandished at me. I went for him and took the knife away from him and slapped him on the cheek. Mr. Brenck came into the kitchen then, and paid him and he marked the bill paid and went out. That is all I know."

Charles Brenck, the proprietor, told the same story in regard to the difficulty. He said that he arrived in the kitchen just after the altercation in which the knife had figured and that he paid Forrester and that the man then went out.

TWO FIRES VISIT SAME HOUSE IN ONE DAY

Second Blaze Inflicts $800 Damage at Home of Mrs. Anna M. Groch.

Two fires, one of which nearly destroyed the house, married the serenity of Thanksgiving at the kitchen of Mrs. Anna M. Groch, 74 Eighth street, yesterday.

The first fire, which was discovered at 11 o'clock yesterday morning, broke out from the ceiling of the first story and the floor of the second, and is supposed to have been caused by a stovepipe which ran through the floor. The fire was small and was, apparently, quickly extinguished. At 9 o'clock, however, a second fire started, supposedly as a result of a spark left from the fire of the morning. The flames gained great headway and nearly the whole interior of the building was gutted. The rooms of the second floor were destroyed, together with their contents. Several boards at the house lost their effects.

The loss to the building is estimated at $500, and to the contents $300. The fire department worked over an hour last night before the fire was extinguished.

VETERANS OF FIRST MINNESOTA GATHER

Members of St. Paul Association Hold Their Fourth Thanksgiving Reunion and Dine Together at the Metropolitan Hotel—Daniel W. Lawler and Rev. Alexander McGregor Deliver Addresses.

Thanksgiving day has of late years been adopted by the First Minnesota veterans of the Civil war as one occasion for an annual reunion. Accordingly, last evening, at the Metropolitan hotel, the members assembled for the fourth time with their wives and a limited number of invited friends to eat their Thanksgiving dinner together.

The surviving members of the St. Paul association are: R. L. Gorman, president; M. L. Evans, secretary; Josias R. King, Charles Muller, Andrew Krieger, J. V. H. Benton, George Mortimer, H. W. Boyce, E. C. Scherfberg, J. H. Odell, E. L. Loyd, Patrick Fallin, C. F. Hausdorf, W. S. Reed, William Berkman, J. R. Chaney and H. T. Evans. Other members of the First Minnesota who were present last evening were: Col. F. M. McKusick, now adjutant of the Soldiers' home; Gustave Plummer, of Minneapolis, and C. S. Durfee, of Minneapolis.

Among the guests last evening was little Miss Anita Van Kleck, granddaughter of Capt. R. L. Gorman, president of the St. Paul association, and great-granddaughter of Gen. Willis A. Gorman, who commanded the First Minnesota throughout a greater part of the Civil war.

Upon the invitations issued for this occasion appeared a list of the names of the members of the First Minnesota: Bull Run, Ball's Bluff, Shenandoah Valley campaign, Yorktown, Fair Oaks, Savage Station, White Oak Swamp, Antietam, Gettysburg, Vicksburg, Chattanooga, Missionary Ridge, Lookout Mountain, Vicksburg, Second Bull Run, Antietam, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Bristow Station and Mine Run.

John F. Gehan, accompanied by Miss Hildegard Rentz, sang "Columbia," after which President Gorman introduced Dr. W. Lawler, who spoke somewhat as follows:

D. W. Lawler Speaks. "This is the day when the people of this land, in all parts of the world, wherever they may be, come together before their altars and in their homes, to thank the Giver of All Good for the blessings which they have received."

It is fitting that this day—Thanksgiving day—should be selected for a reunion of the members of the First Minnesota regiment. We thank God today that we have a flag, that we have a constitution, and that the principles of that constitution are so firmly established that every effort to overthrow them has but strengthened them in their foundation. But were it not for these men who sit about us here tonight and such men as these there would be but little to us to be thankful for.

Forty-two years ago these men were involved in one of the most unique struggles in the history of nations, a struggle in which brother met brother and men of the same country who had lived under the same government and believed in the same institutions were arrayed against one another. It was a struggle in which the republic of Washington and Jefferson was a living fact. There are men here who

GOOD CHEER REIGNS

No Home but Has Its Thanks-giving Spread, and All Find Cause for Gratitude.

Another Thanksgiving has come and gone, memorable only in the fact that the traditions incident to the season were duly respected. A search for something new or out of the ordinary was unsuccessful. 'Twas the old, old story—the story that one would not wish to have changed—a grateful people giving thanks for blessings received.

Distinctly a home day, many happy family reunions marked its observance. Absent members came from far and near to make the household complete. Many of these family gatherings caused a pang of regret by the intrusion of sad memories of the happenings since other Thanksgivings. A few vacant chairs told their own story of dear ones who have been, but are not now; but, as best could be, these recollections were forgotten in the remembrance that there is ever something for which to offer thanks.

Turkey, cranberry sauce, pumpkin and mince pies. The regulation menu was to be found almost everywhere, in the home, the hotel and the restaurant. So active were the numerous charitable organizations in seeking out the needy that it is doubtful whether a single family failed to partake of some of the good things to eat that form an important adjunct to the observance of the day. The inmates of the poor farm and workhouse were not forgotten, nor was due provision omitted for the unfortunates in the clutches of the law.

The day was observed as a holiday by public officials, railroads and commercial houses generally. Those that remained in town experienced little difficulty in passing a pleasant day. Many of the churches held appropriate services in the morning.

Many Forms of Diversion.

Special matinees were given at the Metropolitan and Grand in the afternoon. The younger folks, and not a few of the older, patronized the popular and the up-town skating rinks. Judging from the attendance, the one at Dale and Laurel was an especial favorite. There was also skating at Como. Devotees of the ancient game of curling were found at the Selby avenue rinks.

Excitement ran high over the Minnesota-Wisconsin football game and contributed largely to the number of people on the streets during the afternoon hours. A crowd of several hundred enthusiasts braved the cold and stood for hours on Fourth street, between Robert and Minnesota, listening to the returns from Madison. Personal comfort seemed to be forgotten and general good nature reigned.

Under more comfortable conditions the game was followed by a large gathering of members and their friends in the rooms of the Commercial club. Refreshments were served and the occasion was enlivened by an excellent musical programme from 2:30 to 5. The movements of the piskin across the miniature gridiron hung in one of the rooms, and the cheering and every play in favor of the home team loudly applauded by both ladies and gentlemen.

Turkey Tasted Like Money.

Any one who had turkey yesterday ate real money, for there was not a morsel of any size sold that cost the purchaser less than 12 cents. This was on the basis of 20 cents a pound, and the majority of the turkeys sold called for an investment in excess of $2. Despite the increase in price the commission men say there never was a better trade in the national bird than this year. Housewives demanded them, no matter the cost.

Every charitable institution had its quota of turkey and the accompanying menu of other good things. At the St. Vincent de Paul society, the prisoners had all they could eat, while Chief of Police O'Connor was just as solicitous for the comfort of those enjoying privacy at the city hall. The workhouse authorities likewise saw that those under their care were provided for liberally.

At the city and county poorhouse turkeys and mince pie was a feature, and the Board of Prisoners, at the County Park M. E. Church added to the occasion by treating the inmates to a programme of music and readings.

Good Cheer in Every Home.

If there was a family in St. Paul that went hungry it was not the fault of the charitable organizations or the St. Paul Board of Prisoners. The drag-net of charity more effective in its round-up. Every section of the city was searched for its poor and homeless, and wherever a family or individual was found a well-filled basket was provided.

Football games were pulled off in plenty—that is, amateur games—but the big one at Madison got all the attention.

Many Danced Last Night.

Last night nearly every available hall in the city was filled with dancers. The Packers' union, of South St. Paul, held its second social of the season at Federation hall. The event was largely attended and very successful. The union was organized only three months ago, but has a membership of over a thousand. The committee in charge of the party was George Steep, E. B. Gilbert, Louis Sokalsky, George Willis, J. Dugan, Guy Williams and Nels Carlson.

An enjoyable entertainment and ball was given last night in Madison hall by the local branch of the National Association of Stationary Engineers. The programme consisted of a wrestling match for the lightweight championship of St. Paul, between Pearl Brown and Harold Berger, which was declared a draw; followed by vaudeville acts and a boxing contest of five rounds between George Barron and Pat Ebbs. Dancing began at 10.

The Hebrews Ladies Aid society gave its eighth annual ball at Elks' hall last night and the attendance was large. Music was furnished by the Twin City Mandolin club. The committee of ladies in charge of the affair was Mrs. A. B. Cherniss, Mrs. H. Curmonow, Mrs. A. Curmonow, Mrs. L. Hertz and Mrs. M. Abrams. The ball was a social and financial success.

Minnehaha camp of Modern Woodmen held its fourteenth annual entertainment, banquet and ball last night in Minnehaha hall. Invitations were confined to the Woodmen, their families and immediate friends.

FIRE DESTROYS TWO WEST SIDE HOMES

Blaze Starts While Family Is Absent and Spreads to Adjoining House.

Two small cottages, side by side, one the home of Matt Egginger and his family of eight children, the other that of Otto Reimers, a young married man and his wife and infant child, were burned to the ground last night.

The two stand in a group at the foot of the bluff and face the road that runs along the south river bank above the high bridge.

The fire that rendered the two little families homeless destroyed nearly all the belongings of the young man just starting in life, and those of the old man, whose only possessions were his small house and a few pieces of furniture.

The fire started in the home of Reimers, 700 West Water street, while he and his wife were away making a Thanksgiving visit. When they returned at 8 o'clock they found the house enveloped in flames, which had been burning for some time.

The fire is supposed to have started from the kitchen stove, and it had a big start before it was discovered by neighbors. The flames leaped across a short space and caught upon Egginger's house, which it quickly consumed. Egginger and his family of eight children were asleep together in one of their three rooms, discussing the events of the day, when a neighbor opened the door and announced that the house was on fire. Everyone leaped into the street.

Fire Engine Arrives Too Late. Nearly all the apparatus in the city was at the fire at Sibley and Fourth streets, and the only engine available when the alarm was received was No. 10. This engine and a chemical were dispatched, but on account of the remote location of the burning buildings it was a long time before they arrived.

When the engine did arrive, however, it could draw no water from the river on account of defective suction, and the houses were doomed.

Neighbors had broken the door of Reimers' house and removed a few articles of furniture, and Egginger's sons were able to save most of their furniture before the fire had destroyed the house. The cottages burned like tinder, the walls of water which the burning houses carried from the river nearby having no effect upon the fire. When the two houses were a mass of flames and threatened the surrounding homes, the impromptu bucket brigade devoted its attention to preventing a spread of the fire.

When the fire had completely destroyed the two houses and nothing remained of them but the standing chimneys and heaps of brightly glowing embers, Matt Egginger still continued to fight the flames. Drawing water from the well, he worked with the greatest energy of despair, throwing bucketful after bucketful on the flaming pile.

"Ach! Mein Gott! Now I have nothing but mine children!" exclaimed the father, wiping the perspiration from his brow. "I have worked hard all my life, and now everything is gone. Even the woodpile, fifteen cords, sawed and split, that the boys got out of the river, is gone. The woodshed, too, is burned, and the coal is burning. And winter is coming on. And I am Thanksgiving, too! What will I do? Gott in himmel knows!"

Egginger, with his wife and children, the youngest two years old and the eldest twenty-one, were housed last night by neighbors.

The house occupied by Reimers was owned by Frank Hogard, 463 Joy avenue. Reimers had $500 insurance on his furniture.

ESCAPE OF RAIDER

Gen. Morgan's Brother Throws Light on a Mystery.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Nov. 26.—Standing at the door of his old cell, No. 21, Col. "Dick" Morgan, of Lexington, Ky., today set at rest the forty-year-old story that Warden Merion, who had charge of the old penitentiary at the time of the escape of Gen. John Morgan and his officers in 1862, was in guilty collusion with the escaping Confederates. Asked the question, he made this reply:

"Not the slightest in the world. The fact that an effort was to be made to escape was not known to all of our men, to say nothing about outsiders being made acquainted with our plans. I had no part in the escape of Gen. Morgan and his officers. I was in the cell at the time of the escape, and I was not in the cell at the time of the escape."

Concerning the matter, Gov. Nash, upon whom Col. Morgan called before going to the prison, said:

"No one who knew Warden Merion ever believed the charge, which grew out of the exaggerated condition of the public mind during the war. No one could have bought him as was charged."

Col. Morgan today also stated that, instead of being liberally supplied with money when he left his brother and his six companions had only about $50 between them, and this was made up by the contributions of those who remained behind. It was the visitor of today who conceived the plan of escape and helped to put it into execution. The plan was to break through the wall of the cell block, which was being built by the prisoners, and to escape through the wall. The plan was to break through the wall of the cell block, which was being built by the prisoners, and to escape through the wall. The plan was to break through the wall of the cell block, which was being built by the prisoners, and to escape through the wall.

The failure to find the dirt brought out of the tunnel was another mystery of the time of the escape. Col. Morgan today said that most of it was stored in the duct back of the point at which they were working; while the rest of it was packed into a large stove used for heating the block. Had it not been for his brother's devotion to him John Morgan would not have escaped.

SHOE-RENT

There's a charge for store rent in every pair of shoes retailed.

There is also a charge for advertising, in the selling of Regals. Does the advertising add to the cost of selling, per pair, or reduce it? Let's see:

A store paying $20 per day for rent, and selling twenty pairs of shoes, without advertising, would have to charge you one dollar per pair for rent alone.

If, by spending $20 per day additional for Advertising, the same store can sell 200 pairs of shoes instead of 20 pairs, then the rent and advertising combined would cost only 20 cents per pair, instead of $1.00.

It is a favorite argument with unadvised shoe stores that they can give better value than Regals, because they do not advertise.

As well say they could give better value than Regals because they have not trade enough to employ more than one salesman.

It is the volume of sales which reduces the cost of selling each pair, and proper advertising is the quickest, and cheapest, way to get volume, when the shoes are good enough to be worth advertising.

Regal advertising is only one little cog in the Regal system of "Tannery to Consumer," but Regal quality could never be sold at $3.50 without the advertising which makes 60 Regal stores the busiest in their respective cities. See windows or write for Style Book.
