ALASKA MUST WAIT

Subcommittee Will Not Advise Territorial Government.

Globe Special Washington Service, Jan. 1, 1904.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 1.—The greatest interest attaches to the report which the committee of four senators who visited Alaska last summer will soon make to the senate committee on territories in regard to proposed legislation for the far northern possessions of the United States. Senator Nelson, of the subcommittee, has been in Minnesota during the recess of congress, but two other members of the subcommittee have been hard at work in preparation of the report.

It is settled that the committee will come out squarely in favor of granting Alaska representation in congress, either through a regularly elected delegate, or through a resident commissioner. The committee will also recommend that appropriations be made for roads in the territory, believing that means of transportation are of the utmost importance in developing the interior of Alaska. It is, of course, equally certain that the committee will not recommend a territorial form of government. It thinks the time is not ripe for the establishment of a full-fledged territory, and is supported in this view by a considerable element in the Alaska population. Nevertheless, the members of the subcommittee have listened to many arguments on the other side.

One of the recommendations of the committee will be the establishment of fish hatcheries to replenish the stock of Alaska salmon and to save the fisheries from serious depletion or even extinction. This recommendation became known some time ago, and a large appropriation for establishing hatcheries on lands withdrawn by the interior department was recommended.

filled in the annual estimates of the secretary of the treasury.

There are now representatives of the Alaska people in Washington urging legislation in behalf of the territory. Several of them are working at cross purposes, as has always been the case. The recommendations of the committee of senators will be accepted as authoritative, however, and there is a good chance for legislation this winter of kinds calculated to be of practical and lasting benefit to the territory.

SEVEN MEN BREAK A DUSTY BOTTLE

Filled With Old Johannisberger and a Hoodoo.

NEW YORK, JAN. 1.—Seven jolly Wall street brokers broke a hoodoo Tuesday night, not with red hot iron pokers by the new moon's misty light, but with clinking crystal glasses filled with golden drops of wine, old blue seal Johannisberger from the banks of Father Rhine.

In the caves of one Lorenzo it had long reclined in slumber, waiting for some daring fellow to select its ancient number marked upon the wine list with four Xs, and the tax five and twenty dollars for the bottle sealed with bluish wax.

'Twas the last remaining member—once there was of them a pair—which old "Deli" himself selected from a vintage famed and rare. With solitude he watched them till the day when that great bear, "Charlie" Woerlshofer, drank one, which was more than one man's share.

Then he spread its fame by telling all his friends about the wine, till they tried to buy the last one. But Lorenzo in a shrine worshiped the green dusty bottle, and he vowed that in his life no one should profane the blue seal, he would guard it as his wife.

When he died the fame, still growing, of his friends about the wine, till they tried to buy the last one. But Lorenzo in a shrine worshiped the green dusty bottle, and he vowed that in his life no one should profane the blue seal, he would guard it as his wife.
