WISCONSIN WOMAN SAYS THEY OUGHT TO DRAW SALARY

Arguments Against Suffrage for Women, Which is Only Desired by a Minority—Men Who Smoke More Agreeable Than Those Who Do Not.

A Wisconsin woman would revolutionize domestic matters entirely, and says that absolute equality between men and women will only come when wives are paid wages for their services as homemakers. This is reported to be the idea of a woman suffragist who probably believes, as most suffragists do, that when the law puts women on an equality with their husbands and brothers, that the millennium will have arrived. This woman says that wives should be allowed a share of the husbands' earnings and it be placed in the bank to their credit. She also went vigorously for the women who do nothing, and more vigorously for the man who spends much money for cigars or tobacco in other forms and says that women have no equivalent for foolish expenditure.

There do not seem to be any startling novelties in summer fabrics, but all the goods are noticeable for their dainty colorings and the dimities, organdies and muslins are lovelier than ever. A certain distinction is always obtained by a gown, no matter how simply made, if it is of an exclusive design and these can only be purchased at the early sales. A remarkably pretty batiste is printed with single violets all over and at one edge (the material is fifty-four inches wide) is a border about five inches wide of masses of violets and above is another narrower band of the same. This material made up over pale violet silk and trimmed with lace insertions and violet colored ribbons would make a most charming afternoon or garden party frock.

The gown illustrated is also of border printed goods. It is of white organdy with a dainty light blue border finished with a scallop which makes the extreme lower edge of the dress. The skirt is made with clusters of tucks in front, on the side and in the back, five gores in all, and between are insertions of white lace, which start below the hip line and terminate in points at the top of the flounce. This flounce is made of the bordering and is joined to the upper part of the skirt by lace insertions, arranged to form points, as is shown.

The bodice fastens at the back and is also made with corresponding clusters of tucks and is trimmed with a yoke of the bordering edged with lace insertion, and the bordering is used for the elbow sleeves.

Deaths in the family for a long time prevented society from entertaining the Cryder triplets, who once more are in the swim and are as popular as in their first season, three years ago. For almost two years they were "out of things," but, as if making up for lost time, they have been everywhere since the new year. At the Pembroke Jones dance they were together and looked so much alike that the uninitiated men thought they had landed too long in Mr. Sherry's cafe. The triplets are Edith, Ethel and Elsie, and their names are almost as confusing as their similar looks. Miss Edith Cryder has been visiting in Boston, where a great fuss was made over her. The girls are tall and blonde and have an aristocratic bearing. Mrs. Dunlap Cryder, their mother, was formerly Miss Ogden, and although little is heard of the Ogden family, fifty years ago this was a most conspicuous family. The Cryders cling to the old Washington square neighborhood, and a series of small teas will mark their return to the world of fashion.

A soberly dressed little group of persons departed for the Bermudas Thursday, and all appeared in gloomy spirits. It was the bereaved family of Senator William A. Clark, of Montana, depressed by recent divorce, illness and death. The senator has just recovered from an operation. Mrs. Everett Mallory Culver has just been divorced and the wife of Charles Clark, the son, died a few days ago in this city. After all these troubles the family is seeking rest in the sunny Bermudas. The senator looked an impressive crew of servants that attended the Clark party. A servant attended each person and there were two extra servants. The senator looked especially ill and was white as a ghost behind his beard and a huge fur collar. He walked with difficulty from his carriage.

Evidently the Culver divorce agreed with the plaintiff, and Mrs. Culver, who has a certain amount of brunette beauty, was radiant. The haggard look that disfigured her a few months ago had vanished, and instead her face shone with good health. Her little daughter Joy goes with her, and this granddaughter of Mr. Clark is the possible heiress of the bulk of his estate. Before sailing for the Bermudas Mrs. Culver was seen in society. A respectable divorce lends rather an impetus to a woman, it seems. Mrs. George Crocker has seen fit to "take the air" Mrs. Culver, and the wedding of Mrs. Crocker's daughter to Philip Kearny the divorcee was conspicuous. Arrived in a study in gray cloth and moleskin, she was an imposing figure and concealed well her joy at sitting in the same pew with Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs and Mrs. George B. de Forest. FASHIONS FROM VOGUE

Prepared Specially for THE GLOBE.

At this time of the year the shops are filled with new muslins, linens and light silks for the coming spring and summer, and for those who can afford to buy ahead there is an indisputable advantage in procuring these fabrics now, for many of the patterns are printed only in small quantities and will not appear later in the season.

A certain distinction is always obtained by a gown, no matter how simply made, if it is of an exclusive design and these can only be purchased at the early sales.

Japan and Russia Present Their Contentions.

TOKIO, Feb. 9.—Last night the foreign office issued a review of the negotiations with Russia leading up to the rupture of diplomatic relations. The review says the last reply from Russia was received at Tokio Jan. 6. In this reply Russia did not mention the question of the territorial integrity of China in Manchuria, on which Japan had asked for an assurance, and that Russia insisted that Japan recognize Manchuria and its littoral as outside her sphere of interest, and also maintained her demands regarding a neutral zone in Korean territory and the non-employment by Japan of Korean territory for strategic purposes.

The statement concludes that the Japanese government has been throughout actuated by principles of moderation, impartiality, and has demanded of the Russian government no more than the recognition of a principle which has been repeatedly voluntarily announced by Russia herself. While the Russian government persistently refused to accede thereto, and while unduly delaying on the one hand its replies whenever it had to make one, had on the other hand augmented its military and naval preparations. In fact, a large Russian force was on the Korean frontier. The Japanese representative at Tokio to present its reply to the last proposal of the cabinet to take into account the consideration set forth above and that it would appreciate the wish manifested by Russia to come to a peaceful understanding with Japan.

Instead of this, the Japanese government, not even awaiting this reply, decided to break off negotiations and suspend diplomatic relations. The imperial government, while laying on its side the full responsibility for any consequences of such a course of action, will await the development of events and the moment it becomes necessary, will take most decisive measures for the protection of its rights and interests in the far East.

ST. PETERSBURG, Feb. 9.—An official communication issued today gives the Russian account of the negotiations which led to the rupture. "Last year," it says, "the Tokio cabinet, under the pretext of establishing the balance of power and a more settled order of things on the shores of the Pacific, submitted to the imperial government a proposal for a revision of the existing treaties with Korea, Russia consented and Viceroy Alexieff was charged to draw up a project for a new understanding with Japan in cooperation with the Russian minister at Tokio, who was entrusted with the negotiations with the Japanese government. Although the exchanges of views with the Tokio cabinet on this subject were of a friendly character, Japanese social circles and the local and foreign press attempted in every way to produce a warlike ferment among the Japanese and to drive the government into an armed conflict with Russia. Under the influence thereof the Tokio cabinet began to formulate greater and greater demands in the negotiations, at the same time taking most extensive measures to make the country ready for war.

All these circumstances could not, of course, disturb Russia's equanimity, but they induced her to take military and naval measures. Nevertheless, to preserve peace in the far East, Russia, so far as her incontestable rights and interest permitted, gave the necessary attention to the demands of the Tokio cabinet and declared herself ready to recognize Japan's privileged commercial and economic position in the Korean peninsula, with the concession of the right to protect it by military force in the event of disturbances in that country. At the same time, while rigorously observing the fundamental principle of her policy regarding ment of Feb. 5 to the foreign office here: The independence and territorial integrity of the Korean empire being regarded by the Japanese government as absolutely essential to their own country's security and repose, they cannot view with indifference any action tending to render the position of Korea insecure. The Russian government has by means of inadmissible amendments successively rejected Japan's proposals respecting Korea, the adoption of which the Japanese government regarded as indispensable to assuring the independence and territorial integrity of the Korean empire and to safeguarding Japan's preponderating interests in the peninsula.

This attitude of the Russian government, coupled with their successive refusal to enter into an engagement to respect China's territorial integrity in Manchuria, which is seriously menaced by Russian's continued occupation of that province, notwithstanding her treaty engagements with China and her repeated assurance to the other powers having interests in the same region, has rendered it necessary for the Japanese government to seriously consider what measures of self-defense they are called upon to take in the presence of the delay on the part of the Russian government in connection with the pending negotiations which has remained largely unexplained, and which it is difficult to reconcile with an entirely pacific aim.

In the pending negotiations the Japanese government has exercised a degree of forbearance which they believe affords abundant proof of their loyal desire to remove from the relations between Japan and Russia every cause for future misunderstanding, but, finding in their efforts no prospect of securing from the Russian government any adhesion either to Japan's moderate and unselfish proposals or to any other proposals likely to establish a firm and lasting peace in the far East, the Japanese government has now no other alternative than to terminate the present futile negotiation.

In adopting that course, the Japanese government reserved to themselves the right to take such independent action as they may deem best to consolidate and defend Japan's menaced position, as well as to protect her established rights and legitimate interests. The Japanese government, having exhausted in vain every means of conciliation, with the view to removing from the relations of the two countries every cause for future complication, and finding that their just representations and moderate and unselfish proposals made in the interest of permanent peace in the far East were not receiving from the Russian government the consideration which is their due, have resolved to sever their diplomatic relations with the Russian government, which for the reason named has ceased to possess value.
