FRENCHIES HENCE

Veteran Expressman Departs for Soldiers' Home

"Frenchy," the expressman, will be found no more on the Cedar street stand, having decided to retire from business in preference to obeying the mandate of the city council and change locations. He has gone to the Wisconsin state soldiers' home with the avowed purpose of spending the remainder of his days there.

Stylister Montour is "Frenchy's" name, but he was seldom so addressed. To his associates, to his customers and to the public he was known as "Frenchy," retentive, jolly and a humorist for business. The first man to locate on Cedar street, he remained to see his selection become the most popular location for expressmen. During the past few weeks business has not been up to its average, and when the city council passed the ordinance requiring the expressmen to cease using Cedar street as a stand, the measure had been approved by Mayor Smith. "Frenchy" decided that it was time for him to retire, not being able to calmly witness the gradual development of the city and the consequent pushing of the expressmen to locations further removed from the business center.

The old horse, mule and wagon and all the rights, privileges and emoluments thereto pertaining, together with their prestige and large public acquaintance, were sold to Montour. All efforts to persuade Montour that there would likely be as much business at a new stand as had been secured on Cedar street were unavailing, and at the first good offer he parted company with the nag and truck, and made preparations for his departure to his new home.

In the thirty-five years that Montour has been in the business he has always been on hand looking for work. During the dull periods the ranks of the expressmen have thinned, but Montour was always to be found looking for work in his line. Dull times he could stand, but when ordered to leave Cedar street he gave up in disgust.

HAMLIN KEEPS MUM

Does Not Explain Turning Down of Eli Warner

News of the Hamlin-Warner disagreement, in which Eli Warner took part, seems to have been dropped, continues to be the topic of discussion among Republican politicians interested in the state campaign.

Conde Hamlin, chairman of the state central committee, returned yesterday from Chicago, and told newspaper men who called that he had succeeded in landing "Uncle Joe" Cannon, of Illinois, for two speeches in Minnesota during the campaign, but he failed to shed any new light on the situation in inner Republican circles regarding the naming of an executive committee without the initials of Eli Warner being on the shirt front of one of the committee.

Warner and his Ramsey county friends are saying very little, but Republicans generally are discussing the situation. Reports of the trouble even reached Gov. Van Sant's office yesterday. "Without Eli, Dunn would not have made anything of a showing in the county, and while the delegation was captured by the Collins men, it was the party of Eli Warner, Reese and their following. If anybody is entitled to anything from Dunn's chairman, it is Eli Warner, and he and Dar Reese should be taken care of anybody is entitled to consideration. The nomination of Mr. Warner was proper as a member of the committee at large, but it would have been better had he been recognized a Collins man in Ramsey county on the third place given the county on the general committee."

"The range country has only been developed for a few years, but the Virginians are just completing a handsome new red pressed brick school, with light stone trimmings, costing from $60,000 to $70,000. If friends of the board of control idea are wise according to N. E. Boucher, warden of the North Dakota penitentiary at Bismarck, and a man who has given the subject a great deal of study, they will avoid the mistake made by the Minnesota lawmakers and stick pretty closely to the ideas contained in the Iowa law.

"I have no doubt that an effort will be made to pass a board of control law in the next winter's session of the North Dakota legislature," said Warden Boucher at the Merchants hotel yesterday. "The board of control idea is spreading throughout the country and it will take hold of North Dakota sooner or later, and I look to see a bill presented to the legislature establishing the centralized system of control of state institutions."
