OUT OF TOWN MUSICIANS

During the past week the musical world was interested in the announcement of the death of Edward Hanslick, the eminent Viennese critic. Edward Hanslick had by nature and education all the qualifications for him for the greatest music critic of all times. But with all his eminent learning on musical subjects and his personal attainments as a musician he fell woefully short in his judgments and estimates of men. Hanslick has been called the "great conservative," but he was not that, because he allowed himself to become the leader of an aggressive campaign against progress in music, as represented by Wagner, Liszt, Bruckner and his later followers. Not only was Hanslick the champion of Wagner, whose upholding of Bach, Mozart and Beethoven against modern tendencies and revolutionary tactics, but he took an active part in proclaiming Brahms as the legitimate successor of Beethoven as against the claims of Wagner, whose music he characterized as devoid of melody and full of meaningless noise.

Yale university did a graceful and appropriate act in conferring the degree of doctor of music on Frank Damrosch, such an excellent time for them to make the effort. The theatrical public is sick to death of the musical comedy, there is no doubt about that. The books of these have been growing thinner and thinner, the music has become more and more trivial and the show girls have become showier and showier, until they have come to represent the "whole show" to use a street expression, and, as a result, the audience have grown more and more restive. Therefore an excellent opportunity presents itself to the great contralto to interest American theatergoers in something worthier and to create a taste for a class of opera that for several years now has found but few patrons.

That Mme. Schumann-Heink will make much out of her role, if it affords her any opportunity at all, nobody who is familiar with the personality of this gifted woman can doubt. She is a born comedienne, with her impulse to burlesque is natural and at times apparently irresistible, as one is reminded by recalling her last appearance here. But perhaps nobody on the operatic or concert stage today has a keener appreciation of the possibilities and the dignity of vocal art nor a greater reverence for music. Much stress has been laid on the fact that Mme. Schumann-Heink is going into comic opera to make money. Well, this is a laudable enough ambition if the prima donna is firmly convinced that her work in it is important, that it is not merely a makeshift for one season, and nobody who has followed her musical career can doubt that this conviction will influence her in making her new venture an artistic, and not merely a scenic, success.

Mr. Carlisle M. Scott, of Minneapolis, has been appointed assistant professor of music at the state university. Mr. Scott is the possessor of a highly artistic temperament and a thorough technical knowledge, the latter the result of several years study in Leipzig.

The music at the Park Congregational church today will be sung by the following choir: Miss Marion Lindsey, soprano; Mrs. George E. Gere, alto; P. H. Metcalf, tenor; George Crampton, of London, England; Mrs. George D. Heatherington is the organist. The order of service today follows: Anthem—"Magnificat," Parker. Response—"Hear My Prayer," Schilling Quartette. Solo—"The Sweetest of Old," West. Mr. George Crampton. Solo—"Lord, God of Abraham," Mendelssohn.

Herbert Witherspoon, the basso, and Mme. Macdonald, the coloratura soprano, will go to the coast on a concert tour this season, giving a series of fifteen recitals. Mrs. Frank L. Hoffmann will be their accompanist.

MEN CHARGED WITH MAKING BOGUS MONEY

One Tells Where Counterfeit Is Concealed When Told of Others' Confession

ATLANTA, Ga., Aug. 20.—Secret service officers within the past three days have arrested three men here charged with counterfeiting. The prisoners are Clarence Rebb and Oscar McMichael, employees of a local printing house, and John M. Little, who lives near the city.

The counterfeit is one of the $10 "Buffalo" bill. It is of excellent workmanship and has caught a number of firms in this city, including a banking firm, which has two of the bills. McMichael delivered the plate and $600 of bad paper.

Little, when he learned that his partner had confessed, told where $6,700 of the money was concealed in this city, and the officers recovered the entire sum. It is asserted that Rebb passed the money, and when arrested he was identified by a considerable number of his victims.

The officers declare that Rebb and McMichael have been slipping into the printing house where they were employed and printing the bills at night. Their employer, who is held entirely innocent of complicity, has rendered the officers excellent aid. The officers declare the plate was bought from another firm outside the state.
