Colored Attorney Stops a Fight Between Two Greek Peanut Peddlers, and Receives a Blow in the Face-Then He Proceeds to a Wabasha Street Restaurant Where He Is Not Served With a Meal Until He Threatens the Proprietor With a Sult for Dam-

F. L. McGhee, colored attorney, had a lively time yesterday afternoon. He stopped a fight between two peanut peddlers, receiving a stray blow in the face for his trouble, and was obliged to threaten legal proceedings before he could procure a meal at a Wabasha street restaurant.

The first difficulty occurred as he came out of the postoffice. His attention was attracted by a loud contention between two Greeks, John Contoe and D. Dimitrocopolis, proprietors of peanut stands. The men had become involved in an argument over a claim for rent which Contoe demanded of Dimitrocopolis. As McGhee approached the row became lively, and in the mixup several bags of peanuts were spilled from a stand. Without taking the precaution of protecting himself from the fists which flew about, McGhee dashed into the thick of the fray and received a blow in the face. The fight was stopped, however, and the men were soon locked up at the central station on a charge of disorderly conduct. Reaches Eating House

Mr. McGhee then went to a Wabasha street eating house and took a seat at the lunch counter. Five minutes passed and McGhee turned uneasily in his chair, wondering why several other patrons who had entered the places after him had been served, while he was still reading the menu. He asked the waiter why his order had not been taken. He was fold to wait a minute.
