WOMEN LOVE DOGS INSTEAD OF BABIES

What the Women of New York Do for French Poodles and Other Canines

Something was said on this page yesterday about the devotion of some women to dogs. In the March number of Success this question is gone into by a writer whose subject is the mortality among infants in New York city and the terrible neglect of mothers and children among the poor.

He says he knows of one outfit of clothes and blankets imported from Paris for a fashionable dog which cost $2,000. Some ignorant person may not know what kind of clothes a dog wears, and for the benefit of the unlearned let me say that they have coats of various thickness and richness, silver toilet articles, jeweled collars of untold price, high leather boots costing $8 and $10 a pair, and blankets of different shades to match the various costumes of their doting mistresses.

But if any gullible person thinks that this is all he is much mistaken. There is a dog specialist in New York who commands his own prices—usually $10 a visit—and is called in whenever a doting couple or whims. One fashionable woman called this specialist from New York to Newport to stay a week and watch, and he was under the impression that she had charged $100 a day, which she cheerfully paid. Who can blame him? He who can part a fool from his money is generally a wise man.

Then there is a sort of dog governess, who comes in the morning (and blows his nose, I suppose), who is paid fabulous sums. Another possible career for the woman who must work but has no particular accomplishments. Now the man who writes this exceedingly painful article, in which he mentions the names of the most famous women of New York whose babies die from starvation and other terrible causes, could be saved. One of the largest maternity hospitals in New York was crippled last year for the lack of $30,000. Less by half than many a woman pays for a string of pearls. All that this man says may be true, but he seems to forget that the women who do these foolish things could save all the babies without giving up a thing. For the woman who spends fabulous sums on jewels and dogs are fabulously rich. Not ordinarily wealthy, but rich beyond the dreams of avarice. They could give the amounts needed and still wear their jewels and make fools of themselves about dogs, too, if so inclined. And they seem to be so inclined. It passes comprehension why, if they are so anxious to adopt some kind of an animal to pet and adorn, they do not take a human animal from the orphan and foundling asylums and pet that. It certainly would turn out as well as a French poodle and would be a greater credit to their intelligence.

To love dogs and cats is not a sign of no brain; it is a rational and natural thing to want them about. But it is a sign of awful degeneracy for a woman who has no children to waste the love, attention and money which should be lavished upon children upon poodles. Also a sign of no brain. The question is whether a woman with no brains can be blamed for displaying a lack of sense. This is too deep for me. The woman who prefers a dog to a baby is radically sprung somewhere.

It actually hurts to read what the writer referred to has written of the fearful contrast between the suffering of the mothers and babies in the slums and of the degrading foolishness of rich women over poodles. It is almost enough to make one hate the sight of a dog. The pampered ones spoken of live on dainties that not one child in a thousand in New York ever sees. Cream and sweetbreads form their staple diet, served from gold and silver dishes. Bah, it is enough to sicken anybody. But there is no gainsaying that every woman has the right—the legal right—to spend her money as she will, and if she wants to fatten dogs that is her business. All that is asked of her is to help the children of the slums, too, and if some of them could do without giving up one thing for the dogs. I hope all extremists in the poodle business will read this article in Success.

MRS. CODY UNDERGOES A CROSS-EXAMINATION

Gives Answers Reflecting on Her Husband Very Reluctantly NORTH PLATTE, Neb., March 1.—Mrs. Louise N. Cody was subjected to a long and searching cross-examination today on the evidence given by her in her husband's divorce suit. Mrs. Cody became very nervous and contradicted her former testimony on some points. When forced to give answers reflecting on her husband, she appeared to do so reluctantly. The examination developed that Col. Cody and his wife had separated several times and had been brought together again by relatives and friends.

Set of Dickens at $130,000 NEW YORK, March 1.—A suit today over a contract for what is regarded as a record subscription book sale was settled out of court in this city today. The contract was for a set of illustrated edition of the works of Charles Dickens, in 112 volumes of text and 18 volumes of illustrations and Dickensiana, at $1,000 a volume, making $130,000 in all. The purchaser was Mrs. Abbie B. Blodgett of Fishkill on the Hudson, who had already bought twelve other volumes for $18,000.

Mrs. Blodgett, 75 years old, wealthy and an amateur collector of works of art, whose judgment was formerly regarded as good. Within three years immediately preceding her death she made contracts for rich editions of her favorite authors, amounting to a total expenditure of $283,000, or half the value of her estate. The payments were to continue until 1917. Mrs. Blodgett's son, the executor of the estate, brought five suits to set aside her contracts and all have been settled.

Albert Lea, Minn., March 21, 1901. Messrs. Ely Brothers: I suffered from a severe cold in the head. I could not breathe through my nostrils. I used about a bead from want of sleep. I used your Cream Balm and woke up with a clear head. I would not take five dollars for my bottle of Cream Balm if I could not get another.

White skirts for wear with separate white lace, silk or chiffon blouses and made of canvas, velveteen, serge, crash, or some one of the pretty novelty materials, are extremely attractive made in this way, and for ornamentation they may be braided, appliqued with raised motifs or inset with a band of heavy lace just above the hem.

The skirt shown by the gown illustrated is an excellent model for a house skirt to be made of any of the lovely thin woolen goods, either in plain color or in the deep flouncing, showing a woven or printed border at the lower edge.

The skirt is cut in five gores, with circular side breadths, and is laid, as may be seen, in narrow box plaits that are overlapped at the belt and pressed very flat to below the hips, from where they flare out in full graceful lines.

FASHIONS FROM VOGUE

Prepared Specially for THE GLOBE

Very wide striped silk, black and white, dark blue and gray or any other striking color combination would make up admirably in this style of gown. The dark stripe should be used for the plaits and the corselet and stock should also be of the darker color, or these and the undersleeves might be of lace.

cherry colored cashmere trimmed above the hem of the skirt by rows of narrow antique gold cord. The bodice is box plaited back and front and dull gold buttons fasten the plaits at the top, while the sleeves consist of box plaited puffs reaching to the elbow and tight undersleeves trimmed with bands of the antique cord. A high corselet of a deeper tone of cherry lousine is folded tightly around the waist, the ends crossing in front and fastening at the back with a dull gold oval buckle.
