FOR WOMEN READERS

AN UNUSUALLY SMART TAILOR COSTUME

ALE gray will be the predominating color wherever there is a gathering of smartly gowned women, attired for the street or visit-Such a long period has elapsed since there was any marked vogue for this modest shade that there seemed little likelihood of its reinstatement. Fashion called for rioting tints and what place could anything so demure as pearl gray hope to fill under the circumstances? But fashion is ever fickle. so it is far from surprising to learn that the Quaker color is now about to be sent forth into the world to again play a rival part to the myriad gayer colors the winter made smart.

The largest sphere in which grays will rule is the outdoor one. Athletic costumes and everything in the way of sporting gowns will be tinged with silver if they make even the slightest attempt at being chic. The tones will range from light to very dark and the majority of open air exercise costumes will show a mixture instead of a plain Tweeds are ever serviceable and good style, but serge has again come into its own, and is built into the most stunning short costumes that we have set forth to tempt the fair. Imported serges are expensive, but they give such excellent satisfaction that it marvelous to think they have escaped the dressmaker's eye for so long. One of the newest athletic costumes In which the harmony of grays is to be observed has a short plaited skirt of an invisible small plaid. There are broad box plaits separated by groups of narrow side ones. The jaunty little coat is short and rounded at the fronts more like a tuxedo than a woman's garment, This is made of pale gray serge and is stitched on the edges, is provided with a generous supply of pocket flaps and possesses a set of mannish looking notched revers. The only thing that could possibly be worn under such a coat and not spoil its whole effect is a stiff linen collar and chemisette with a semi-fitted vest of some contrasting color, bright blue, scarlet or white.

But gray is not to be confined entirely to this class of feminine costume. Not at all, if one is to draw conclusions from the number of orders already sent in for handsome long skirted street and visiting gowns. What would the fair seeker after novelties and ultra smart ideas in dress say to the following: First, a long graceful skirt arranged over the hips in several well shaped gores and flaring modishly at the feet; simple surplice bodice crossing over vest and stock of white guipure on; the surplice idea repeated in the back so that the vest continued down a point there also.

Around the arms and shoulders no gathers or plaits broke the smoothness of the surplice, but in the front toward the waist the material arranged itself into a few plaits held down by a very broad suede belt fitted with a large square leather covered buckle. The edges of the surplice were bound with a flat braid, and clusters of three tiny ornamental straps tipped with small silver buttons were grouped on each side. At the bottom of the high stock, which was of guipure, appeared a very narrow cravat of cloth tied in a stiff knot at the throat.

At the elbow, where the gigot sleeves terminated, the cloth section was sup-plemented by a long tight cuff of guiplemented by a long tight cuff of guipure wrinkled on the silk foundation and buttoning closely to the wrist. The top showed a narrow frill of lace extending around the arm. Here was the

HEALTH AND BEAUTY

THE PLAIN WOMAN'S QUEST
She wasn't a particularly vain woman, as women go, and he wasn't a quack, or even a beauty specialist. Still, after had run through the inevitable round of questions, he saw there was something more to come, and this was what it was. The woman sat forward a little in her chair and looked straight into the doctor's eyes.

"I did not come to you because thought I was sick." she began, "although you seem to think I am, but because I'm thred of being so plain. I did not used to be so. As a young gird so you have to easy and homely and hom

If' I say, 'Sleep enough, and you don't really need to go abroad art all,' they laugh and pack their trunks. Now, you are in a nervous state, where you must sleep. If necessary, sacrifice other things for the sake of sleep. As a means to good looks there is nothing more important than sleep, and nothing—no, absolutely nothing—that will turn a pretty woman into a plain one faster than the lack of it.

"You should make a point of being asleep by 10 o'clock. Whenever you can, slip off to bed shortly after dinner, and let 8:30 find you in bed. And, once in bed, stay there as long as you conveniently can in the morning. A lean, anaemic, highly strung woman like you needs to lazy in bed every minute you can. 'Early to rise?' Not a bit of it!
