The Kansas City Journal thinks there must be some truth in that old saying about a lie being such a good traveler truth can never overtake it, and gives the following as evidence: "Some faithful Democrat started a story just after the Republican state convention that E. E. McJimsey, its chairman, said in his 'Message from Missouri' speech at Topeka, that the Republicans stood on show of carrying this state this fall. It was printed so often that Mr. McJimsey got tired of reading it, and he published a signed editorial in his paper giving the lie to the man who originated it, and quoting the exact language he did use—language the meaning of which was exactly the opposite of that attributed to him, and which described Republican prospects of success in this state as bright. Mr. McJimsey's true version has not been republished even by Republican papers; but the original falsehood is still going, the latest paper to publish it being the Fulton Gazette."

What The President Has Achieved.

From The Chicago Rec-ord-Herald.

If we except the New York Sun, which still insists that there is to be no arbitration of the differences between the operators and miners, because there is nothing to arbitrate, it is slight exaggeration to say that the newspapers of two continents are unanimous in their encomiums upon President Roosevelt for his share in bringing about a settlement of the anthracite coal strike. As was to be expected, the foreign press goes to the extreme of according to him the whole credit for bringing the opposing interests to terms. Naturally they endow Mr. ROOSEVELT with many of the attributes of an absolute ruler, and speak of the proposition made by the mine operators as his personal achievement.

In the estimation of the London Times the President has not only done a big thing but "an entirely new thing," and it goes on to say that the ending of the strike as it has been brought about marks "the definite entry of a powerful government upon a novel sphere of operation." And it speaks of him as a Moses who can lead the American people "out of the dangers threatening them if any living man can."

Now, while this is the language of misconception and extravagance its praise is deserved to the extent that the President has been largely instrumental in bringing peace through compromise out of a situation big with direful possibilities not only to those immediately concerned but to the whole country. He dared a great risk when he invited the representatives of the contending interests to meet him in conference over a matter he disclaimed any official authority. This disclaimer saved his great office from sharing in the rebuff which personally he had to endure in that conference, and today it saves his course from being construed into a departure that may lead him or his successors into novel spheres of government intervention in affairs beyond the legitimate scope of his office.

For ourselves we cannot commend too highly the ferriess discretion of the President that has enabled him to differentiate between what he could do through his occupation of a high office and what he had no authority to do as President of the United States. He dared to incur misrepresentation as a public man, but he was careful not to place the authority and dignity of his office where they could be flouted by either party to the dispute.

Herein, we take it, lies the Presidents chief claim to the plaudits of his countrymen. He has not enlarged the powers of the presidency nor hunched the government on a strange and unknown sea. He has been the means of bringing the pressure of public sentiment to bear on certain arrogant corporations to make them listen to reason and the demands of the public welfare. And this he has achieved with a tact and patience that excite increased admiration because he has not generally been suspected of their possession.

Current Comment

It wasn't until J. Pierpont Morgan landed on his return from early rising and "see Perkins," that Great Fortune, the public turned its eyes in the direction indicated and saw Perkins. Two words from the lips of might made Perkins famous. Before he became the chief tentacle of Mr. Morgan's octopodean energy he was an insurance agent in Chicago. But now the world asks him: "How shall we bring up our boys?" He is as important as an editor of whom everybody asks everything—and gets a satisfying answer, or at least a silencing one. Mr. Perkins' advice about boys is good, fully as good as everyone's could give. Advice is something that does not deteriorate in quality from year to year or age to age; it is so cheap it doesn't pay to debase it, and everybody has it to give away. Mr. Perkins says: "Too many young men in this country don't want to work hard. They prefer to take things easy—stay up late at night and lie abed too long in the morning. They can never get ahead in that way." Sehlom can they. We are not acquainted with the habits of the young man who came up to Saratoga from Kentucky the other week with $500 and won $35,000. He probably never would have done it if he had stayed up late at night, and lain abed too long in the morning. It must have been on account, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, of his excellent habits that he acquired a fortune in a week that many a man never attains to in a lifetime. By going to Saratoga and practicing an early bedtime and a lacklike awakening others may do as well. In Wall street, where great fortunes are made, the habit of its moneyed magnates of going to bed with the chickens, or at least at the same hour so popular with the poultry, and drawing aside the drapery of their couches at four a. m. to enter upon the day's duties, is doubtless directly responsible for those Fifth avenue palaces, those yachts, Newport villas and European trips. We are quite sure of it.

British economists are becoming alarmed at the aggressiveness of American trade and in their business with other nations they find that they are losing ground, while this country is rapidly gaining. They do not admit that the superiority of American goods had anything to do with it, but they lay the blame to the indifference of British traders, who stand still while the Americans forge ahead. The plain fact is that our goods are selling on their recognized merit, and it is this, as well as Yankee push, that is causing an increased volume of foreign trade from this country.

Railroads, particularly in the west, are spending considerable money in taking out curves and cutting down grades. There are several good reasons for this. In the first place time-saving is a great feature in railroading, and efforts are being made to shorten all trunk lines as much as possible. Another important factor is to make the grades as easy as possible, in order that more cars may be hauled by the same power. This reduces the number of trains and, necessarily, the number of crews.

The September condition of corn, marked by the government at 84.3, is far above the ten-year average. This should be gratifying to the producer. Kansas is 25 points above its ten-year average, while Nebraska is 33 points up. These are great feeding states, and the year's heavy yield will mean that more cattle and sheep will be fed in the west than for several years past. Aside from the large yield the quality of the corn is better than usual, says the Chicago Sun, as the season was such that it had a chance to fully mature.

The successful millionaires who intimate that college education is not necessary to the attainment of great wealth, which to them is synonymous with success, are in danger of being held morally responsible for the truancy of a large number of lads who are weary of their books.

"It is too much to ask of some people that they think twice before speaking," says the Alfalfa Sage, of the Kansas City Star, "but it would help a lot if they would take time to think once."

As a remedy for rheumatism the sting of bees is recommended highly. It should prove fully as popular as rheumatism as a cure for bee stings.

The total value of the manufacture of bricks and tiles in the United States in 1900 was $78,336,871, and of pottery $19,768,670.

Stricken With Paralysis.

Henderson Grimet, of this place, was stricken with partial paralysis and completely lost the use of one arm and side. After being treated by an eminent physician for quite a while without relief, my wife recommended Chamberlain's Pain Balm, and after using two bottles of it he is almost entirely cured. Geo. R. McDonald, Man, Logan county, W. Va. Several other very remarkable cures of partial paralysis have been effected by the use of this liniment. It is most widely known, however, as a cure for rheumatism, sprains and bruises. Sold by Webb Drug and H. Co.
