GRIPPE MORE DANGEROUS THAN ORDINARY COLDS

May Be Followed By Other Diseases—Germ Produces Nervousness

Grippe is a different and more dangerous disease than the ordinary cold, according to Dr. M. P. Ravenel of the school of medicine of the University of Missouri. It has become a fashion, however, to call all severe colds, grippe. The ordinary cold is an inflammation of the mucous membrane of the upper respiratory tract. The proper name for grippe is influenza. It is caused by a specific germ which, to a greater or less extent, invades the body. It invariably produces a nervous condition and often times intense depression, symptoms which are not seen with the ordinary cold.

Grippe is a dangerous disease. It may be followed by pneumonia, meningitis or severe intestinal symptoms. Indeed, in one form of grippe the digestive track is the chief location. This is known as abdominal or intestinal grippe.

Grippe is particularly dangerous for those suffering from chronic diseases, particularly consumption. After a long absence from America, an intensely severe epidemic reached this country in 1889. There was a large number of deaths, and a number of cases in which the depression and delirium almost reached insanity. There were many cases of tuberculosis following this epidemic. These cases were unquestionably people who had been infected with the tubercle germ and were resisting it. The attack of grippe so lowered their vital power that the tubercle germ again became active.

The first symptoms of grippe are usually those of an acute cold, chilliness, sneezing discharge from the nostrils and a cough. The germ is thrown out particularly in the material which is coughed up. It is fortunately a delicate germ, and can not survive exposure for any length of time.

The grippe germ is spread chiefly by sneezing, coughing, or direct contact of any sort. The use of the same handkerchief by a number of persons readily spreads it from one to another.

There is no specific treatment for grippe. Patent medicines should be avoided. It is a disease which requires the services of a skilled physician and the utmost care.

Pleurisy pains are located just below the short ribs. Lumbago affects the same region but toward the back. BALLARD'S SNOW LINIMENT is the remedy in either case. I rubbed the remedy in either case. I rubbed the muscles and the patient can move about freely and comfortably. Price 25c, 50c and $1.00 per bottle. Sold by Corner Pharmacy.—Adv.
