THE HABIT OF SAVING

Many persons are diligent enough in making money, but do not know how to economize it, or how to spend it. They have sufficient skill and industry to do the one, but they lack the necessary wisdom to do the other. The temporary passion for enjoyment seizes us, and we give way to it without regard to consequences, and yet it may be merely the result of forgetfulness, and may be easily controlled by firmness of will, and by energetic resolution to avoid the occasional causes of expenditure for the future.

The habit of saving arises, for the most part, in the desire to ameliorate the condition of those who are dependent upon us. It dispenses with everything which is not essential, and avoids all methods of living that are wasteful and extravagant. A purchase made at the lowest price will be dear, if it be superfluous. Little expenses lead to great. Buying things that are not wanted soon accustoms us to prodigality in other respects.—Moshys Message.

FIRST CRATE OF BERRIES

S. O. Elwell was the first grower to bring in a full crate of home grown strawberries. He brought in a crate of Mitchell's Early, Monday and sold them to John Walsh for $7.20. They were a few days later than usual this year.
