

Late Fiction.

Buck Parvin and the Movies.
by Charles E. Van Loan.

Every night great crowds of people throng the motion picture shows and follow the changing fortunes of their favorite actors.

The author of this story lived for months with the movie makers and has woven their real adventures and their real love stories into this novel. It is brimming over with humor and will be enjoyed not only by those who attend the movies regularly but by any one who likes a lively story.

Spragges Canyon.
by Horace Arnesel Vochill.

The author is not only a story teller but an artist as well in this story. It is a story of California where the author has lived and ranched for years and where he with his English friends covered leagues of mountain and valley.

In the pioneers, the Spragges, in the gray-eyed girl of the me-quite country, the frivolous Town girl and the young ranch-man, he has a contrasted group of characters who play out their thrilling drama in canyon and forest.

Pirates of the Sky.
by Stephen Gaillard.

This story reminds one very much of the writings of Jules Verne in that he makes the impossible seem possible.

A foreigner becomes the leader of a band of "sky pirates" in order to make money to finance a "Cause".

They attack cities and carry off great riches, kidnap maidens, etc. A newspaper owner secures the services of the hero, an aviator, who traces them to their hiding place and fights it out with them.

The Last Ditch.
by J. Raymond Elderice.

The hero of this story is the son of a wealthy man. He had tried his father's patience to the utmost and when a senior at college, when the father is called upon to help the boy out of a scrape he offers him a minor clerkship in his office. The boy refuses and decides to go to work on the Panama canal. The book tells of his experience there, how he made a good fight and came out victorious and a man that his father was proud of.

The Office Boy.

by Father Finn.

Michael Desmond is Father Carney's office boy and general factotum around the church.

A newspaper has a piano contest and Michael persuades the Director of the Young Ladies Sodality to enter. Michael conducts the campaign and proves to be quite a politician.

Father Finn is a splendid story teller and in this story he is at his best.

The pupils of the grades gave a splendid program at the school auditorium yesterday afternoon. The little ones had been carefully drilled and those present reported a very pleasant hour. We would like to mention each number separately but as we are just going to press, have not the time. Will say that every parent should have been present.
