H. L. ROSE SURRENDERS WHILE PACE OF 100 MEN FROM ILLMO, MO., SEARCH WOODS WITH BLOODHOUNDS.

Illmo, Mo.—After two bloodhounds and a posse of 100 men and boys had searched the woods near here for hours for H. L. Rose, an engineer on the Iron Mountain Railroad, who shot and seriously wounded J. Leland Dalton, 21 years old, a teacher at the Illmo High School, Rose surrendered to Chief of Police W. M. Seagrave, at Cape Girardeau. The shooting occurred at the graduation exercises of the high school.

The shooting resulted from Roscoe Pierce, superintendent of the high school, administering a whipping to Joseph Rose, 12 years old, son of Rose. The Rose boy was not a pupil of the school, but he had been taken into the school by Dalton following a fight he had had with some of the pupils during recess.

The Rose boy engaged in a rock fight with the pupils of the school during a morning recess. Dalton was attracted by the fight and he caught the boy, returning with him to the school. He took the boy before Superintendent Pierce, who gave the boy a whipping and then ordered him to go home.

The father of the boy went to the school while the graduating exercises were being conducted and asked to see Dalton. A number of teachers in the school advised Dalton not to go to the door, but he insisted that he wanted to explain the trouble to Rose.

"Are you Mr. Dalton?" the man asked as he stepped from the front door. "Yes," he replied. "Mr. Rose, I will tell you how it happened," said Dalton.

Before Dalton had time to utter another word Rose drew a revolver from his pocket and fired four shots, one striking Dalton. John Kelly, janitor of the school, attempted to stop Rose as he started to run. Rose, it is alleged, pointed his revolver at him and snapped the trigger, but the cartridge failed to explode.

Dalton is serving his first year as a teacher. He was graduated in 1922 from the South and East Missouri Teachers' College of Cape Girardeau. He is a son of Dr. J. P. Dalton of Cape Girardeau.

The bloodhounds were sent from Cape Girardeau and upon arrival at Illmo were immediately put on the trail of Rose.

Dalton was taken by automobile to a hospital in Cape Girardeau. The bullet entered the right groin and ranged upward into the abdomen.

The Rose family recently moved to Illmo from Bush, Ill.

AVIATOR AND WOMAN KILLED IN PLANE CRASH

United States Revenue Collector's Bride Dashed to Death in a Fall of 2,000 Feet.

New York.—William Coates, a former army flier, and a woman passenger were killed in a 2,000-foot nose dive at Frankness, N. J., when the wings of Coates' plane crumbled in midair.

The woman was Mrs. John Brady, of Paterson, bride of less than a year. Her husband, an internal revenue agent in Newark, missed only by seconds the end of the fatal flight, on which he had gaily sped his wife but a few minutes earlier. Brady reached the spot where his wife and close friend had been flung from the mishap wreckage of their craft in time to take Mrs. Brady in his arms and beg her to speak to him. His pleading was in vain; both had died instantly.

Coates was chief flying instructor at Roosevelt Field in war time. His last accident was his tenth. In December he dropped 1,000 feet in a crippled monoplane, escaping with a broken leg, from which he was still limping when he started his last flight. In July, 1920, he dropped 3,000 feet with a passenger into the pines at Monticello, N. Y., and both he and the passenger were unhurt. The flight that was to be his last was the first for Mrs. Brady.

Brady was an enthusiastic flight fan. He frequently had been up with Coates.

SARAH HAD GENTLY HINTED Remark Might Have Led Beau to Imagine She Disappeared of His White Clothes.

Mrs. Morgan had a colored maid named Sarah. One Sunday afternoon the mistress saw Sarah's lover leaving the house clad in a suit of white flannel. A little later, when the maid appeared, her mistress said: "Sarah, that beau of yours should never wear white. He is so black that white clothes makes him appear all the blacker. Why don't you give him a hint?"

"Why, Mis' Morgan," said Sarah with animation, "I done give him lots ob hints, but he jes' natterly ain't got ob sense an' ain't take 'em."

"Probably you didn't make the hints strong enough," said the mistress. "Well, no'm," said Sarah, reflectively, "I don't believe I did. I jest looks at him right hard, an' I says, 'Nig-nab, yo' sho' do look like a black snake crawlin' out ob cream, yo' do.' That's jes' all I says to him, Mis' Morgan."

"How much is this perfume?" "Fifty cents a dram." "Huh! Do you sell it by the drink?"
