 P. M. ZOOK

—Miss Bonnie Brodbeck was very agreeably surprised Monday of this week, December 9, 1907, by a few of her relatives, Mrs. Lottie Keeney, Mrs. Ida Evans, Mrs. Emma Zook, and Mrs. Mica Curry, and Mrs. Setta Philbrick. "drop ping" in on her, without even telling her anything about it, the occasion being the anniversary of her birth. Of course they took a cake and other good things to eat. The top of the cake was a double affair, the outside top being covered with small wax candles of different colors, and each candle was supposed to represent one year of her life, and a truly beautiful and brilliant sight did the table present, after the curtains had been drawn, to create a semi twilight, in order to bring out the dazzling effect of all of these candles (or, perhaps it would sound better to say these few) burning at one time. Miss Bonnie persisted, and stuck to the statement that she was only "sweet sixteen," but everyone present insisted that she certainly must be mistaken, but if she was correct, then each one present was not as old, by several years, when they left, as they had been when they came. And on top of the cake were, let's see, well, we do not remember the exact number of candles, but we're positive that there were more than sixteen. Then if the number of candles on the cake did not represent her correct age, there was certainly a mistake somewhere, but we cannot figure out where it occurred, for there were so many candles upon that cake, each guest counted them, more than once, compared their counts, and they tallied in every instance, so the number of candles upon that cake must have very nearly accurately represented her age. A delightful afternoon was passed, and at the hour of departure the guests each wished Miss Bonnie many happy returns of the occasion, or at least as many as would be consistent with the number of candles upon the cake.
