

Hot Stove—Cool Kitchen

How do you expect to endure the broiling days of summer if you prepare all the food over a glowing coal fire?

You need a "New Perfection" Oil Stove that will do the cooking without cooking the cook. It concentrates plenty of heat under the pot and diffuses little or none through the room. Therefore, when working with the

the kitchen actually seems as comfortable as you could wish it to be.

This, in itself, is wonderful, but, more than that, the "New Perfection" Oil Stove does perfectly everything that any stove can do. It is an ideal all-round cook-stove. Made in three sizes, and fully warranted. If not with your dealer, write our nearest agency.

The Rayo Lamp

a substantial, strongly made and handily lamp. Burns for hours with a strong, mellow light. Just what you need for evening reading or to light the dining-room.

Only One Negative Vote.

With only one vote recorded against it, that of Mr. Littlefield of Maine, the House of Representatives on the 6th inst., under suspension of the rules, passed the Sterling employer's liability bill, after forty minutes' debate.

In brief, the bill establishes the doctrine that the railroad companies engaged in interstate commerce are liable for personal injuries received by employees in the service of such carriers. It abolishes the strict common law rule of liability which bars a recovery for the personal injury or death of an employee caused by the negligence of a fellow servant.

The measure relaxes the common law rule which makes contributory negligence a defense to claims for such injuries.

A provision, however, diminishes the amount of the recovery in the same degree that the negligence of the injured one contributed to the injury. The bill further makes each party responsible for his own negligence and requires each to bear the burden thereof.

ATTENTION, COMRADES:
All comrades of Meyer Post are here by notified to assemble at the court house on Saturday afternoon, April 25th, at 2 o'clock, for the purpose of transacting such business as may properly come before it. The semi-annual dues are now due and comrades are requested to come prepared to pay their dues for the term beginning Jan'y 1st, 1908.

MINDING THE BABY

"Well," said Potter, "I've moved. Ever since I've been in New York I've lived in a boarding house in Gramercy place. It was a good enough place and I'd probably stay there for the rest of my life if it had not been for a young man named Smith and his wife, who took the room next to mine and—"

"Ah! I see," said Roysten. "Tried to flirt with the pretty Mrs. Smith and the jealous husband naturally went for you."

"Worse'n that a blamed sight," said Potter, dolefully. "She went for me herself, then the landlady sailed in and finally the whole house, and if ever I rack a baby for anybody again may I be struck off life-size as a sample of a real idiot. Now, anybody to look at me could, I suppose, take me for an obliging man," he added, pausing to wait for some expression of opinion to come out of the dense cloud of smoke opposite.

"Er—yes. Pray go on."

"Well, those Smiths began to suspect it the minute they saw me—hadn't been there a week before my room looked as if I boarded somewhere else—actually that fellow had borrowed everything that could be moved, invited me to smoke my own cigars and said he felt more acquainted with me than he did with his twin brother—found out since he never had a twin brother. Got so confounded chummy and so all over that I only had room enough to be chummy back again, by George, and demme if I didn't feel grateful for even that. Went home one evening dead sleepy and beat out—had set up all night before with a sick chap—and the minute I struck my room there was Smith waiting for me. Said he and his wife wanted to go round the corner on an errand, and asked me if I wouldn't just listen, and if I heard their baby cry go in and jog the cradle. I said I would, like an ass, and after they'd gone, and long before I'd begun to listen, that cry broke out in the next room like a bagpipe. Gad, how sleepy I was! But I went in and jogged that cradle, joggled it like the deuce, and the more I joggled the more the little whelp yelled. Thought, perhaps, it had the nightmare or something, and hauled it out of its bunk and kind of threw it round to wake it up, but when I tried to see if it had its eyes open, I'll be blamed if I could find any eyes. It went right on getting redder and redder, howling like forty demons, and finally wriggled so way inside of itself that I couldn't see anything but clothes, and didn't know where to take hold of the little imp.

"By jove, but I was sleepy, though, and mad enough to wring Smith's neck! I didn't know what on earth to do—never'd been so near a cub in my life. I whistled to it, swore at it, shouted Ben Bolt over it, tried to look like its mother, told it 'twas 'muvver's ownzey's little izzie, wizzie, dizzie,' but it didn't believe a word of it—just hooted two octaves higher up and for five minutes I almost wished I was dead. Then I thought I'd lay it down again—never forget how awful sleepy I was—guess my foot slipped or something; anyway, we both fell in the cradle. Of course, the poor little thing broke out in a fresh spot—been a fool if it hadn't—and I braced up and began jogging that cradle again like mad. I was desperate. The chandelier jingled, the pictures got to hanging crooked, the floor creaked and the cradle cracked. You'd thought all Bedlam had a day off—the little tartar's howls weren't in it—sounded as if they'd been wrapped up and laid away somewhere and—just then in walked Smith and his wife and began to apologize for staying so long, while I made for the door. I didn't get there, however, for Mrs. Smith was looking in the cradle and screaming, 'Where, oh, where is my angel child, you monster of a man!' And then Smith looked, too, and leaped all over me, shouting out: 'Where is my boy, you scoundrel!'

"Then I looked myself, and felt nearer the electric chair than I ever expected to, for that cradle didn't have a devilish thing in it. Everything was on the floor, but the baby was nowhere, and they went to clawing at me as if I had it in an inside pocket. We heard it talking to itself somewhere, but it might have been a ventriloquist the way it kept us thinking it was everywhere where it wasn't. Landlady came up and said the man below had notified her that a cable car was loose upstairs; then the other boarders flocked in and helped shake things to see if the baby wouldn't fall out. I tried to explain and said I'd only been jogging the cradle, but they all grinned, and one mean cuss said he guessed I'd been jaggling, if he was any judge. Of course the baby was all right—'twas under the bed, where it had rolled itself just for fun, for it was having a better time than anybody in the room. I swore I hadn't put it there, but they all looked suspicious and I left the house. Everybody's grown up where I board now, and I keep my door locked and never oblige a living soul, by George!"

No Files on Him.
Wife (fondly)—Do you remember, John, how you used of an evening to hold my hand, you funny boy, for hours and hours? How silly my old boy used to be.
Old Boy (grumpily)—Nonsense, Jane, don't be stupid. I was always practical and businesslike. I did that to keep you from the piano.—Tatters
