

Making Summer Plans

"Where are you going for the summer?" asked the caller. "Have you made up your mind yet?"

"I've made up my mind so often and unmade it so continually that I almost gave it up in despair," laughed her hostess. "Now, however, my husband and I have settled on a delightful place to stay. I started out by planning to go abroad, but I wanted Sam to go with me, and it's utterly impossible for him to get away this year. Besides, business has been so bad that we really haven't the money. Mrs. Higgins wanted me to go with her, but between you and me, I'd rather never go. Don't let her know I said that, for goodness' sake!"

"Of course not!"

"Then having declined to go with her, I couldn't go with Aunt Martha when she went, without insulting Mrs. Higgins, and I didn't want to do that. Not, of course, that I care particularly myself. But Sam is associated with Mr. Higgins in business. You know how it is?"

"Indeed I do."

"Well, after I had to give that up I set my heart on going to Seattle. The rates are ridiculously low and I thought I could take in Yellowstone park into the bargain. I had about decided on that when Daisy invited me to come to her bungalow in the mountains and Lucy wrote for me to join her at the seashore. Those are two invitations that I had sighed for, so I put Seattle behind me most willingly. I sent for a dressmaker and had quite a lot of things made in the house and out, for the two visits, feeling that I could easily afford it, because I raved so much on car fare and board."

"I Wanted Sam to Go with Me."

"Of course, you could."

"Well, Daisy's bungalow burned last week and Lucy's little girl came down with scarlet fever at the same time, so they both telegraphed me not to come. By that time I had spent so much on clothes I could not spare a great deal for car fare and I decided on a trip up the lakes."

"That's always delightful," the caller said, "but Mame took it last year and nearly froze."

"That's what made me change my plan," said the hostess. "Somebody or other says we are going to have the coldest summer in the history of the weather bureau, so I decided that I wouldn't go."

"One of the girls told me that you were going to a picturesque little fishing village in the east."

"That was three plans before the last," said her hostess. "The one after it was a trip to some Canadian lakes, but we want good things to eat, and somebody told Sam that the table was unutterably mad there and we gave it up. Then we planned a most interesting trolley trip."

"Why, what?"

"Yes, we did. It sounded sort of exciting to drop off at hotels at all hours of the night and spend our days whizzing through space, but somehow we couldn't make the connections that we wanted and we gave that up, too. Then we wrote over to a place in Michigan for a cottage and had lists made for week-end parties from town all summer long. Of course we found every desirable cottage engaged as long ago as last Christmas, and we had to tear up our guest lists."

"Well, what are you going to do? What place is it that is so delightful?"

"The best of all!" cried her hostess, with enthusiasm. "We have screened the back porch, invested in some comfortable chairs, subscribed to half a dozen magazines and purchased a new lemonade set."

"Which means—?"

"That we're going to avoid dressing six times a day and sleeping on boards and being devoured by mosquitoes—in other words, that we're going to stay here in town all summer long and enjoy all the comforts of home!"—Chicago Daily News.

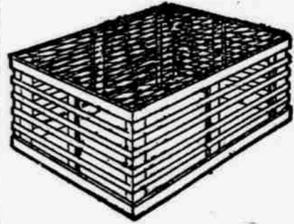

There is always plenty of room at the top of a ten-story building that has no elevator.

FEEDING BOX FOR CHICKS.

A Box-Like Arrangement That Will Prove of Much Value in Caring for Little Ones.

Because of sickness my young chickens were not fed as often as they should have been, so we made the arrangement shown in the accompanying illustration, writes Mrs. A. J. Daniel. The corner and center supports are made of 2x6 pieces, 18 inches long. The top and bottom boards may be made of any one-inch stuff two or more inches wide. This makes a solid foundation for the rack.

Between the top and bottom of the rack the sides are made of lath far enough apart to allow the chickens free access but close enough to keep the hens out. The top is covered with chicken wire. Around the rack we arrange the chicken coops and the chicks soon learn where the feed is and get it when they want it.

Of course, the hens must be fed in their coops, but they can be fed coarser feed, and it is not so serious if they are not fed often; neither does it make so much difference if the hens running about get some of the coarser feed. With this arrangement I was very successful in raising chickens last year.

BROODER OF EASY MAKE.

Secure a box of the desired size and cut a hole in the bottom just large enough to receive a common tomato can. Holes are punched in the sides of the can and a larger one in the bottom to admit a 1 1/2-inch pipe. A hole is then cut in the top of the box through which this pipe extends from the top of the can which is in the bottom of the box. A common lamp furnishes the heat to this radiator.

SOME GOOD POULTRY NOTES.

Ducks, despite the fact that they are a water fowl, should always have dry sleeping quarters.

Raising squabs for market is profitable. The hotels and hospitals in the large cities always want squabs.

Geese live almost entirely on grass and pay nearly as well as hogs.

Fowls have nostrils, but no noses, and do not possess the sense of smell. Provide dark secluded nests for the hens to lay their eggs in.

The hen carries her teeth in her gizzard, therefore feed plenty of grit. Eggs for hatching should be kept where the temperature is even and not near a fire or in a damp cellar.

Save the earliest and best pullets for winter layers. If one or two are not so thrifty as the rest, get rid of them.

If your yards are without grass, air-slacked lime scattered about the houses and yards frequently will keep them disinfected and purified.

If you have been bothered with gape-worms scatter lime thickly about the yard and this will help to drive them out.

In feeding scraps be sure they are not spoiled, as the fowls are liable to become affected with ptomaine poison. Rabbits or squirrels, after being boiled, can be chopped up and fed to chickens.

A good way to pack eggs for carrying to market is to simply place them on end in oats. This does not injure the oats and they can afterwards be used for feed.

Count your flocks as you feed. A missing one may be found and rescued from some trouble if it is looked for at once.

Strips of cloth tied on the branches of trees near the poultry yard will do much at frightening away hawks.

If you have no range for the poultry you must give them green stuff all summer. Sharp grit, too—not sand.

You can get plenty of green bone from the butcher for very little money. The green bone contains nearly every ingredient of the egg. Feed ground green bone, gristle, meat and all.

Many who keep the poultry-houses clean overcrowd their chickens and then wonder why they lose their fowls. Let the chickens have plenty of room and fresh air.

Ration for Laying Hens.

Oats and bran as a part of the daily ration for the laying hen will go a long way toward keeping her from becoming too fat and, consequently, more healthy and vigorous.
