—One can tell character by the way the snow is cleared from the walks. Some people are so egotistical, selfish and narrow they can see no one but themselves, so the only part of their walks cleaned is the part used by them taking no thought for the neighbor just below. One place we noticed after the recent snow, where the occupants, not content with the five or six inches of snow already on the walk pushed the snow from in front of the gate on down making a pile several feet wide and about two feet deep, through which the neighbors living beyond had to wade to get to town. There is no feud in the neighborhood but if we lived there might be one started. Such selfish thoughtlessness is inexcusable and, we are glad to state, rarely met with in this city.
