In the automobile business, an agency finds that it takes cleverness, originality as well as hard, common every day day truthfulness to sell cars to the public, and the enterprising head of the Grand Center Motor Car company, H. R. Lewis, at Seventeenth and Frederick avenue, has made a new proposition to the public in the way of a Saxon Six car. Receiving a carload of autos recently, he selected a Saxon Six, stripped it of its gloss and paint, and arranged the machinery on the chassis so that every feature of this car is easy of access, and a student, as well as an owner, can readily understand its operation. The skeleton of this car shows just what materials, quality and workmanship is embodied in its construction and displays its honest qualities; in other words, just what a purchaser buys besides the beauty, gloss and paint that goes with the makeup. Mr. Lewis presents this car to the public in this shape because he feels that in this manner he is honest and handles honest cars.

"MAID IN AMERICA" AT THE LYCEUM THEATRE TODAY AND TOMORROW

The magnitude of the New York winter garden spectacular revue—the difficulty of transporting the immensity of scenic and costume detail in these metropolitan productions—has until recently made it appear impossible to take these big theatrical amusements on tour in the one-night-engagement places, but arrangements have been perfected whereby several single performances will be given in this part of the country, and it is pleasing to learn that this city is on the limited list of places selected. At least one of the great winter garden spectacles—"Maid in America"—will be seen here at the Lyceum theater, matinee at 2:30 p. m. today; evening performances tonight and tomorrow night. Strange as it may seem, the spectacle chosen for the few one-night presentations is the very largest of all the Winter Garden productions, and, if the New York reviewers' work may be relied upon, "Maid in America" is the most gorgeous of the Winter Garden series of revues. The company is composed of 125 players, headed by Florence Moore, credited by able critics as the world's greatest comedienne. The attraction also carries the largest ballet ever seen in a musical enterprise of this type, and the chorus of young women is made up of sixty original Winter Garden beauties, who will disport on the famous Winter Garden runway. There are twelve scenes in "Maid in America," these depicting mainly the interesting gay night places and incidents of the great metropolis—New York.
