One by one the towns of the state are picking up the warning, "arrest every intoxicated man found on the streets." They will find that the results will be better in the long run.

More schooners have crossed the bar in the past 30 days in Vermont than before in fifty years.—Middlebury Register.

You are right. The schooners did not go over the bar. They went around via the back door in the "fifty years before." A man's kitchen was formerly the bar room, the pantry shelf the only bar he had and oftentimes the wife or the daughter was the bar keeper.

There is a great need of carefulness during these days when vegetation is becoming so parched to guard against the dangers of forest fires. In this section of the state there has been an unusually large number of forest fires and the damage resulting has been very considerable. Valuable timber tracts have been wiped out, houses and other buildings have been destroyed and vegetation has been scorched. All this is due in a large measure to the carelessness of hunters and fishermen who go into the woods, build their fires and then leave them. The danger of the fire spreading can be averted by a little judicious action. So why jeopardize valuable property?

The celebration by the Spanish-American war veterans of this city yesterday is a reminder of that little brush we had with the Spaniards five years ago, but the encounter was of such an every day occurrence that were it not for these celebrations the affair would soon be forgotten. While most of the local boys did not have the opportunity of administering the drubbing to Spain, yet the disposition and willingness was there. As they started away from Barre five years ago to go into camp at Essex Junction they believed that they were to have the opportunity of fighting for the United States in actual conflict. That they did not have that opportunity was not their fault. However they did spend weeks together in the Southern camp and such reunions as that of yesterday serve to keep alive the memories of those days.

Four men out of five can be fitted here in five minutes. For the fifth man it may be necessary to make slight alterations.

JINGLES AND JESTS.

An Etching.
 'Twas in a branch of promise suit the letters all were read,
 And here is what the opening words of each epistle said:

"Dear Mr. Smith," "Dear Friend," "Dear John," "My Darling Four Leaf Clover,"
 "My Ownest Jack," "Dear John," "Dear Sir," then, "Sir," and all was over.

He Knew It All.
 Little Willie—Say, pa, did Solomon know more than anybody that ever lived?

Pa—He did, my son—with the exception of your eighteen-year-old brother George.—Buffalo Times.

His Antlered Escort in the Park.
 Above him the wild skies bending,
 Beneath him the wastes of snow,
 Through the hush of the forest wending
 And over the bleak plateau
 He rode, with his strong heart glowing,
 In a clime of old held dear,
 And the winds of the west were blowing
 With the music he loves to hear.

Beside him, with clanking saber,
 The brown checked trooper rode,
 Yet he passed, as friend and neighbor,
 Where the things of the wild abode,
 Where the things that people the places
 Of mountain and hill and fen
 Were waiting, with kindly faces,
 To welcome the chief of men.

And so that they, too, might render
 Their tribute of love to him,
 Forth, then, in their strength and splendor
 From the forests dark and dim,
 From the wastes and the gushing fountains,
 Like a leaping wave of flame,
 The antlered kings of the mountains
 In royal escort came.

Down through the wild wastes riding,
 They followed him over the snow,
 By the peaks in the cloud mists hiding
 And down to the broad plateau,
 And never, in song or story,
 In toomey or feast or fray,
 Rode king or khan in his glory
 As this man rode that day.
