Among Methodists there is a considerable difference of opinion as to the date of the birth of the great Wesley. But all admit that such a thing is of small importance in comparison with the fact that Wesley lived, for had he not been born at all, there would be no Methodists today.

Each and every one of us should take a long breath and then hold it, for 'tis said that the troubles between capital and labor in New England are at a low ebb. In fact there are few strikes on of any importance in this section, although the other sections of the country are not so fortunate. Among the most important, and that is really of small consequence, is the strike in the building trade at Portsmouth, N. H.

"Have a look" Kingston, the one-wheel bicyclist, who gave a street exhibition here Friday afternoon and Saturday, went to Barre Saturday morning to give a show in that city but returned in disgust. He said he could not ride through six inches of mud.—Montpelier Argus.

Barre mud is vindicated. What heaps of reviling have been cast upon thy head! What loads of imprecations have been thy unhappy lot! But at last your mud-ness has been found of some good, you have served a noble purpose in having driven a fakir from the streets of the city, in saving the shickels in the pockets of the citizens and in preserving the city from being called "easy" in the parlance of the fakirs. Great is mud, and particularly Barre mud!

Those who condone the recent lynching episode which disgraced Wilmington, Delaware, are inclined to justify their defense of the action of the mob by asserting that the mob, by lynching its victim, avenged the wrong done the young woman who was assaulted and killed. The idea in revenge is to make reparation for injury received. Now this Delaware mob which burned the negro white at the stake did not make reparation to the young lady who was his victim. Such reparation was impossible, nor was it possible to make reparation to the family of the dead girl as the mob evidently believed it was doing. In fact it was heaping an insult upon the grief-stricken father and mother by its resort to savagery. In so doing the mob acted in direct opposition to the expressed wishes of the father, and the crime which it committed under guise of exacting punishment was in one sense a worse crime than that committed by the negro. How much better it would have been to have allowed the law to take its course. The most severe punishment which could have been imposed upon the criminal would have been to have taken his life, and there was almost every indication that such would have been the course. Now that the first excitement has passed and the public is beginning to realize the enormity of the mob's offence, public opinion is recovering from its upheaval and gradually there is a revulsion of feeling, even among the people of Wilmington and possibly among even the members of the mob who tied the negro to the stake and then touched the torch to the firebrands heaped about his feet.

The seal of a car containing liquor was broken on Thursday night at Northfield and two barrels containing 240 bottles of beer were stolen, a part of which was buried in a field back of the railroad station. The police obtained a clue and later found 100 bottles, the remaining bottles having been disposed of in some other way. One warrant at present has been issued and arrests are expected to follow soon. Had the grab, which was so carefully arranged above the stolen treasure not become wilted, an ideal beer garden might have resulted.

A suit has been brought by Leo Dandrew, a fourteen-year-old boy of Winoski, through his father, Frank Dandrew, against the American Woolen Co., for the recovery of damages of $5,500. The plaintiff claims that the boy has not attended school twenty-six weeks in the year required by law, and that he was employed by the defendant without knowledge or consent of his father. The complaint alleges that the boy's foot was crushed owing to an improperly constructed elevator and owing to the fact that the elevator was operated by boys under 15 years of age, who were not competent to manage such a piece of machinery. The suit is set for trial at the September term of county court.
