MODERNIZING HOLY LAND.

Invasion of American Mechanical Inventions into Syria.

"A peaceful revolution is now going on in the Holy Land," writes an American correspondent of the London Sphere. "Where plows of antique type were hauled by oxen, and denkeys the steam plow is seen. In harvest time, instead of the patient, antique methods, huge harvesting machines, reapers and thrashers are operated by steam. The standard gauge railway has already penetrated inland to Homs, the 'Manchester of Syria,' where on its arrival a mob demanded its surrender. Victorias and landaus are running between Homs and Palmyra, where the ruins were once a sealed book. Automobile lines are preparing to cross the desert and succeed the mail lines of fleet dromedaries. When the American steam thrasher arrived in Syria from Indiana the plant was promptly bought by Najib Pasha Bey, the progressive millionaire, owning great areas of Syria and Egypt, who vows to buying anything the Americans invent. The success of the plant was complete. The straw brush attached to the separator has opened a new dawn of plenty for starving animals of the Holy Land. Syrian straw is hard and stiff, and hence it was supposed for ages to be valueless. The brusher, a steel cylinder with twelve rows of corrugated teeth making 1,200 revolutions a minute, now makes the straw fit for the animals to eat.

"The Koran," adds our correspondent, "will surely retreat before American machinery and methods introduced simultaneously with American schools. This may be said to be the first death-blow struck at Mohammedanism. The Arabs are accustomed to work and court it. All the wars heretofore waged have never wielded the slightest influence on the religious fanaticism of these people. Machinery and modern methods and enlightened education, however, bringing the Arabs new and cheerful labor, better pay and rewards, will expose them constantly to the weaknesses of their creed and end in their complete metamorphosis from their forms of dress, foods, thoughts and conduct."

Bad For Loufers.

Under Draco's laws, enacted at Athens 621 B. C., all idlers were executed, the laws being carried out to the letter with as much severity as though the offender had been found guilty of murder.

Our Daily Walks.
