"TWO MISSING"

(Copyright, 1902, by H. A. Jenks.)
Almost every day one reads of the "mysterious disappearance" of a well known citizen, but you have only to follow the case for a few days to find that there were good reasons why he should drop out of sight. There is no mystery where the man is an embezzler or defaulter or has become infatuated with an adventuress.

The case of Milo Hastings was one which hundreds of people passed away in their scrapbooks and which scores of sheriffs and detectives have reason to growl over.

Hastings was a young man twenty-three years old, steady and temperate and serious minded. He was half owner in a foundry at Jefferson City, Mo., and at the time of his disappearance was making lots of money and was engaged to a handsome girl who would bring him a fortune.

One day in June, 1907, he called at the bank and deposited $8,000 which had just been paid to the firm. He had a private account of over $12,000 in the same bank. He owed no man a dollar, and had never had a quarrel with anybody, and his health was excellent. He had left the bank at 2 o'clock with a smile on his face, and up to this hour his case is an unsolved mystery. He went somewhere, but where? He did not go by boat or train. He did not drive or ride on horseback. Fifteen minutes after he left the bank he was asked for and could not be found.

The first theory in Hastings' case was that he was involved financially. The next was that he wanted to evade marriage. The third that he had been deceived to some place and robbed and murdered. The fourth that he was a victim of temporary insanity.

None of the theories would bear investigation. It was proved that he was anxious for the marriage to take place, that his financial situation was A1, that there were no particularly bad men in Jefferson City just then and that his mind was never clearer and stronger than on that day.

"Why did he go?" was asked by thousands and "Where did he go to?" by other thousands, but to this date there has been no satisfactory answer.

There were those who held that he committed suicide by jumping into the river. For three weeks the stream was watched and patrolled for a distance of fifty miles. The search covered every acre of ground for miles around.

Every highway was traveled and inquiries made. Thousands of circulars having his photograph and description were sent out, and the reward stood for a year at $10,000. The best detectives in the country spent weeks on the case and could not trace him beyond the doors of the bank. First and last over fifty men were arrested at different points and held for identification, but none of them proved to be the missing man. You will say with others that he must have gone somewhere and that some trace ought to have been discovered, but the fact remains that nothing has been learned.

A reasonable theory of the case is that he left the bank to go aboard a steamer on a business errand and that in crossing the gangplank or while moving about aboard he fell into the river and was drowned. That his body was not discovered only shows that it might have caught fast on a snag at the bottom or floated past the watchers in the night.
