NEW MISSIONARY PLAN.

Yale Men to Establish a Teaching Institution in China. A new idea in American foreign mission work is behind the venture which an association of well known Yale alumni has just planned for China.

Instead of preaching, the Yale China mission will limit its efforts to teaching. Instead of going out among the Chinese armed with the Bible, the men who have taken up the venture will go armed with text books, grammars, histories, volumes on economics, on medical science and on mercantile life, natural science and mechanical and mining engineering.

While the Yale China mission is not to be in any sense an ordinary religious mission, a theological course will be included in the curriculum, and there will be a school of pedagogy for the benefit of young Chinese who propose to teach in the government schools.

The association has $17,000 in hand and has not only made arrangements with the Chinese government, which will establish the school on a safe footing, but has settled upon the city of Changsa, capital of the province of Hunan, where to commence operations.

The general plan of the mission is not to establish another evangelistic venture and thus add to the already numerous missions in the empire, but to put into active co-operation with the present established missions a university training school for natives who go into the government schools to teach.

The mission will provide educational facilities which will equip native Chinese to better their own people. Last June the plans of the association were only partially formulated, but the details were left to be worked out during the summer. This fall the final decision has been made as to the policy to be carried out.

APPEAL OF BALDHEADS. Afflicted Men Want a Hospital For Treatment of Hair Diseases. The suggestion made by a correspondent who signed himself "Thirty-six and Bald" that there is need for the establishment of a special hospital for the treatment of hair complaints finds favor with the baldheaded fraternity.

"I have a disease of the hair producing baldness," writes "Getting Bald," "and have visited the three largest skin hospitals in London and the leading physician attached to another hospital, whom I saw privately. All four agreed in the nature of the complaint, but all prescribed different modes of treatment, all of which I conscientiously tried. Only one of the four had made a study of the hair."

"Surely some of your readers must know of some treatment that will effect a cure without the drastic expedient of shaving the top of the head for eight or nine months, as suggested by an expert," is the plaintive appeal of "Senex," who writes of the "untold misery of baldness."

On the other hand, the principal of a school of shorthand and typewriting, who complains that he is "unfortunately bald," says: "The great profusion and thickness of my hair has been a great trouble to me and has caused me an immense amount of headache. I should be almost as pleased as your correspondent if Mr. Carnegie would provide a hospital for the discouragement of superfluous hair."

Roasted the Ants. A plague of ants invaded an office at Everly, England. Paper soaked with oil of peppermint was spread about, when the ants disappeared in half an hour, and although the odor of peppermint quite evaporated in a few days, their memory was good, and they never returned.
