A SUCCESSIVE LIFE ANNUITY

is a most useful form of the Life Annuity. It is particularly applicable to couples of advanced years. The husband or wife may either outlive the other. To cover both chances the Company agrees to pay the Annuity to one of the two, or one-half to each, while both live, and the whole amount to the survivor. 56th year, doing business in 41 states.

The national Life Insurance Company of Vermont (Mutual). Organized in 1850. S. S. Ballard, General Agent. N. B. Ballard, Local Agent, Rooms 2 and 3, Miles' Block, Barre, Vt.

Any one having the same kindly let us know, or anything for the tables will be thankfully received at 14 Mount street, city.

Wonderful Nerve

is displayed by many a man enduring pains of accidental cuts, wounds, bruises, burns, scalds, sore feet or stiff joints. But there's no need for it. Bucklen's Arnica Salve will kill the pain and cure the trouble. It's the best Salve on earth for piles, too. Price 25c at the Red Cross and Parlor Drug Stores.

THE COUNTRY OF ANYWHERE

[Copyright, 1904, by Richard B. Shelton.] It was the regulation suburban veranda, broad, cool, immaculate. Before it was the regulation plot of freshly clipped lawn, bisected by a path the edges of which were geometrically precise. A few rods up the street, far enough away to be unobtrusive, yet near enough to furnish just the right amount of light, was the regulation street lamp. Even the regulation suburban mosquitoes hummed noisily about and were duly cursed and slaughtered.

Hardwick, stretched comfortably in a steamer chair, blew smoke rings thoughtfully in the still air. Vanetta, seated near by in a low rocker, idly traced the shadow of the vine with the toe of a little shoe.

In the home across the street the long windows on the lower floor were wide open. Through the stillness of the night came floating the tinkle of a piano and a masculine voice singing snatches of Tosti and Nevin's.

Hardwick moved uneasily in his chair. "Hang it!" he burst out suddenly. "I wish it had rained tonight!"

"The girl eyed him curiously. "It would have been easier for you, I suppose," she observed.

"Infinitely," said he. "This sort of thing gets hold of a man—this quiet and peace and eminent respectability. He leaves under a disadvantage. He's homesick before he starts."

"And yet you are going back there tomorrow," she said.

"Yes," he returned bitterly. "I'll go back tomorrow to my railroad and my niggers—and my homesickness."

"And forget all about us up here after a week or so," she said lightly. "Forget us so completely you won't even write us a line."

"I wish I might forget," he said fervently.

"Why?" she asked.

"Well," said he, "for one thing it simplifies matters. Down there, when you think about people you know, it makes you very unhappy. You get to imagining all sorts of things."

"For instance," she prompted as he paused.

"Let's make it personal," he suggested. "When I think of you, I imagine you married to some nice, respectable suburbanite who comes out every night on the 5-13 and finds you waiting for him and a fire burning in the hall fireplace and dinner ready in the cozy dining room and—"

The girl interrupted him with a mocking laugh.

"The nice, respectable suburbanite hasn't loomed on the horizon as yet," she said.

"Nevertheless he will," Hardwick returned. "That's the worst of that God forsaken country," he ended irrelevantly.

"What's the worst of it?" she inquired.

"That it prohibits one from being a suburbanite of the aforementioned variety. Van," he said, rising suddenly and standing by her chair, "I never intended to tell you, but perhaps we'll both feel better if I do. I went down there intending to make my pile and come back here to marry you. The pile is still to be made, and it looks as if I were doomed to stay there forever, but don't think it was because I didn't love you enough or because I haven't done my best."

The girl looked up at his earnest face, and something in it filled her with pity. She had intended to reply lightly. Instead her eyes fell, and she was silent.

"You understand, don't you?" he said after a pause.

"No, I don't understand," she said sharply.

She was aware he stepped back as if he had been struck.

"I don't understand how—how you could misjudge me so," she said.

"Misjudge you?" he cried.

"Yes," she said. "That is just what you have done. Do you think all my hopes are bounded by a house in a conventional suburb with a conventional lawn and all the rest of it?"

He looked at her inquiringly, but said nothing.

She turned her head and looked across the well kept lawn. When she spoke her voice had softened.

"Teddy," she said, "have you ever heard of the country called Anywhere?"

"I'm afraid I don't follow you," he said stiffly.

"Listen," she said, "and I'll tell you about it. It is a very delightful country, Teddy, no matter what its environment—hot or cold, peopled or desert, fruitful or barren. It is always charming to the girl who really cares, because it is his country and he is there. It is lovable because of him."

She stopped, half frightened by her own words. He stood quite still for a moment, then suddenly bent over her and took both her hands in his own.

"Dear little girl," he said, "dear, brave little girl! You tempt me into the selfish cowardice of taking you there."

She felt his big hands tremble; then he stood erect.

"But you shall not make that sacrifice," he announced with determination.

She looked at him squarely, and her gray eyes never faltered.

"The land of Anywhere is worth the sacrifice," she said.

Through the open windows across the way floated the tinkle of the piano and the snatches of song. Hardwick bent over the brown head that rested on his shoulder.

"You and I will find this land of Anywhere," he whispered.

"We have found it, dearest," said the girl. RICHARD B. SHELTON.

Signs of Disease

The First Signs of Disease are a Poor Complexion, Weakness, Emaciation and Lack of Vitality. The first sign of returning health is increase of flesh, strength and vigor. This weakness, emaciation and lack of vitality simply means that certain substances, which go to make up the blood and nerves, have become exhausted; and to renew flesh, muscle and strength, these substances must be restored. Dr. Chaze's Blood and Nerve Food is composed of the same kind of substances that are lacking in the impoverished blood and nerves when in poor health, and abundant in the rich juices that flow through the system when in perfect health. If people would take this food occasionally when in health to keep their blood and nerves in good condition, many spells of sickness and wasting disease would be prevented. It makes sick people well, puts solid flesh and muscle on thin people, gives strength to weak people, restores the lost vitality to nervous people, imparts the tint of health to pale and sallow people. It adds years to life and puts life into years. Price 50 cents. Book free.

Abolition of the Beer Canteen.

Dear Editor: I beg through the columns of your esteemed journal to present some statements recently made by U. S. Army Chaplain O. J. Nave, at the Columbus, Ohio, National Anti-Saloon League meeting. Among other things Chaplain Nave said: "The abolition of the canteen has not increased the number of saloons (licensees) in the immediate neighborhood of the post. At Fort Thomas, Ky., where I am located, there were in Jan., 1901, nine licensed saloons, and in Oct., 1904, there were but seven. "I appreciate beyond all description what the Anti-Saloon League has done for the U. S. Army, in driving the sale of intoxicating liquors out of the post exchanges.

"We don't need any appropriations if we can only have our exchanges back again with the liquor selling portion."

The action of Congress abolished the canteen, but only the liquor selling portion of that canteen. The exchange department for the necessities for the soldiers, was not touched by the Anti-Canteen legislation, but the War Department, as Chaplain Nave plainly indicates, has dealt unfairly in the matter, in that it has in many instances put out the canteen or post exchange entirely, when only the beer saloon of the canteen was affected by Congressional legislation.

Let the exchange be restored and the appropriations of Congress become operative, and then let judgment be rendered. Yours sincerely, W. A. Kinzie.
