Our contemporary comes out editorially for a new station here for the C. V. railroad and what's the use until we have a few trains.—Evening Telegram.

What's the use? Well, it would give you a decent place to rest in when patiently awaiting the arrival of trains that are anywhere from 30 minutes to two hours late. It would alleviate the miseries of travel to and from Barre just so much.

Since gaining the right to vote, Gov. Bell has never neglected the opportunity, and that covers a period of nearly forty years. It is a record of which any person might be proud. In order to exercise the right of suffrage at the recent March meeting the Governor hurriedly left Washington, where he was attending the inauguration ceremonies, and reached his home town, Walden, in time to vote. In so doing he placed before the people of the state an excellent example. If all those who have the right to vote guarded that privilege as jealously, how much more satisfactory would it be! But unfortunately there are very many who value the suffrage so lightly that they will not even stir from their homes, or travel across the street, to vote; while there are still others who are so lost to a sense of honor that they sell their right for money or privilege.

A SILLY SEASON ENDED.

The stubbornness of the Senate of the Vermont legislature in the matter of the appointment of a state inspector of finance is now more apparent than ever, since the original appointee, who was turned down by the confirming body, comes into office. The executive of the state played a waiting game and won, and the Senate will have to take the medicine and look pleasant if possible. That is the result of over-reaching. The Senate, which is merely the confirming body, attempted to arrogate to itself the appointive power also. It demanded the appointment of Frederick S. Platt of Poultney to be inspector of finance, and when the governor chose Luther A. Cobb of Island Pond the Senatorial dignity was trod upon and indecorously dragged in the mud. No sane man questioned the right of the governor to appoint whoever he pleased, and inasmuch as Mr. Cobb (not the Mr. Cobb of agricultural fame) was considered a worthy man, there was not much displeasure shown, albeit Mr. Platt had conducted the duties of the office satisfactorily. But the pride of the Senate must be preserved. And it was preserved—for a time. That body not only refused to confirm the appointment made by the governor, but it hustled through a bill declaring that Mr. Platt should hold the office of inspector of banks until his successor was appointed by the governor and confirmed by the Senate. Consequently the state has had no inspector of finance. The supreme court had confessed that it didn't know and wanted more information. Meanwhile the banks of Vermont got along without the inspector. Now, however, Mr. Platt's good sense has come in and he says that he "resigns." Just what he resigns is not certain, but we take it that he means he will not attempt to conduct the duties of the office. It is not at all certain that he held the office.

At any rate a silly season is ended.

Getting Older.

James Whitecomb Riley says that he was summoned as a witness in a case tried in an Indiana court where one of the witnesses before him evinced some disinclination to state her age. "Is it very necessary?" coyly asked the witness, a spinster of uncertain age. "It is absolutely necessary, madam," interposed the judge. "Well," sighed the maiden, "if I must I suppose I must. I didn't see how it could possibly affect the case, for you see—"

"Madam," observed the judge, with some asperity, "I must ask you not to further waste the time of this court. Kindly state your age."

Whereupon this spinster showed signs of hysterics.

"I am, that is, I was—"

"Madam, hurry up!" exclaimed the judge, now thoroughly impatient. "Every minute makes it worse, you know!"
