Harry McNeill has moved from Elm street to Henry Hay's house on South Main street. Mr. McNeill moves to take up market gardening in which he has recently become greatly interested. People desiring to arrange for a supply of home-grown summer vegetables should communicate with McNeill early, as only a few more parties can be accommodated.
The quo warranto case of C. A. Phelps vs. S. Hollister Jackson which was tried in the January term of supreme court and a verdict rendered in favor of the defendant was brought up again yesterday afternoon at the supreme court when the lawyers for the plaintiffs, Elsie May and R. A. Hoar, presented their reasons to the court for asking that the case be brought forward from the January term docket to the present docket and that they be allowed to re-argue the case. The argument that they presented to the court yesterday afternoon was that the court was in error in deciding as to the birthplace of the defendant's grandfather and had also committed error in some of the facts and the law relating to expatriation. Mr. Jackson appeared for himself and gave a brief answer to the arguments. The court then adjourned until next Tuesday. It is probable that the motion for the reopening of the case will be decided by the court sometime next week.
