How a Horse Sleeps.

Horses always point one ear forward when they sleep. Exactly why it is done no human being can tell, but the probability is that the practice is a relic of the time when they were wild and obliged to be on their guard even when asleep. Cattle, on the other hand, are apparently indifferent as to the position of their ears while sleeping, but no odds what position they are in both are always pointed alike. Ask some observing horseman if it is not a fact that a horse always throws one ear forward when he sleeps.

Commerce and Literature.

"Do you think that a commercial career is to be compared to a literary career?" asked the high browed and melancholy youth.

"My boy," said Mr. Curox, "in business you can write your name on a piece of paper no bigger than a postal card and make it worth thousands of dollars. In literature you can write up reams of paper without making it worth 50 cents."—Washington Star.

The Din Pail.

Professor (lecturing)—Oxygen, gentlemen, is essential to all animal existence. There could be no life without it. Strange to say, it was not discovered until a century ago, when—Student—What did they do before it was discovered, professor?

The Milking Machine.

The milking machine means larger investments in dairying. It means more and better milk and butter and cheese. We thought that we produced a pretty decent sort of milk. The cows were clean and the men were clean, and we have been complimented on the sanitary condition of the stable and milk, but just as soon as we began milking with the machine there was a decided difference. The man stated that he noticed the difference the first time he washed the separator after separating the milk. There was a great deal less dirt in the separator bowl. An expert dairymen the other day sampled the milk and pronounced it perfect milk. There is absolutely no chance for any dirt, dust or anything of the sort to get into the milk, and if the teat cups and rubber tubes are kept clean—and they can be with very little trouble—you have a product that is perfectly wholesome.—Colon C. Little in Michigan Farmer.

Dairy and Stock Notes.

Nervous horses do better kept in box stalls, where they can move about.

Ups and downs in the amount of food given the cows should be avoided. Keep them happy and full.

It pays to run cows for the city man. They should be gentle, halter broken, in good condition and look pretty.

Every time you go to the sheep field take a bit of something for the sheep to nibble on. That's the way to teach them to follow.

Have your own mark on your sheep. They will stray sometimes, and if not marked how can you prove your property?

For the average farmer the profit in growing pigs is made in using up material on the farm that otherwise would necessitate frequent trips to the railroad station to dispose of. Pigs are more easily marketed than are milk and grains that they devour.—Farm Journal.

Finding Most Interesting Chapters.

Women as a class are credited with having no scruples about opening a book at the middle or end or anywhere else they may expect to find the most interesting chapter. A frequent feminine visitor at libraries was overheard revealing to a friend of her own sex her secret of locating at once the most thrilling chapter in any book, no matter how unfamiliar one may be with it. "You simply close it tight," she said, "and glance along the edge of the leaves. It is seldom, indeed, that you do not notice a distinct line, or even more than one, caused by a number of edges soiled slightly more than those about them. Open the book there and you have the best chapter." A librarian explained this by saying that the reading and rereading of the particularly interesting chapters of a book naturally cause certain pages and their edges to be more soiled. Of course the longer the book has been in circulation the more distinct are the marks.—Philadelphia Record.

A Bit of Fairyland.

Cruising down Milford sound, New Zealand, when the clouds are clearing after a shower, the mountains are like fairyland. No longer grim and black and fearful, they are laced everywhere with the streaming silver of cloud born cascades. One day we watched the giddy journey of one of these cataraacts. It sprang from the very top of the Lion rock, a 3,000 foot perpendicular wall. Long and slender and glistening like glass in the sun, it fell straight down over us, but never reached us. It had dropped, say, 1,000 feet, when it was caught by the wind, swept this way and that, and finally blown clean away, dissolving in misty rain. We steamed right under it, or rather, under the place where it ought to have been, and experienced the peculiar sensation of looking straight up at a waterfall that, as the launch slipped past it, "never fell anywhere."—Four Track News.

The Scented Court.

"The scented court" was the name by which the court of Louis XV. was known throughout Europe, on account of the rage for perfumes which then prevailed in France. The expenditure of Mme. de Pompadour for this one branch of her toilet amounted to $100,000 annually. It became the fashion for the host or hostess of a great entertainment to signalize to their guests what particular perfume was to be employed for scenting their rooms on the night for which the invitations were issued, and they were expected to use no other, so that the delicate effect of a unity of odors might be produced. At court a different perfume was presented for each day of the week.

Care of the Eyes.

On rising in the morning the eyes should be bathed gently in cold water. Twenty passes are said to be decidedly strengthening. While using them closely they should be rested at intervals of an hour or two, for the strain of constant reading, etc., is like that of extending the arms at a certain height immovably. Imagine, then, the taxing of the eyes, which cannot complain save after years of irreparable neglect. When dust settles in the eyes warm water will soothe them of any inflammation.—Exchange.

Honors Easy.

"This silver dollar," began the cashier of the restaurant as he scrutinized the coin—
"Is bad, eh?" interrupted the sour looking patron.
"Well, it doesn't look very good."
"That so? Just bite it, and if it's anything like the dinner I had it'll taste even worse than it looks."—Philadelphia Press.

Man, the Monstrous Specter.

What a monstrous specter is this man, this disease of the agglutinated duct, lifting alternate feet or lying dragged with slithering, killing, feeding, growing, bringing forth small copies of himself; grown upon with hair like grass, fitted with eyes that move and glitter in his face; a thing to set children screaming, and get looked at nearer, known as his fellows know him, how surprising are his attributes!—R. L. Stevenson.
