The Grateful Patient.

(Original) Dr. Sylvester Fordham, specialist, had passed the morning in his consulting office listening to the complaints of one patient after another until 1 o'clock, when, tired out and thinking that he had attended to the last applicant for treatment, he threw himself on a lounge for a few minutes' rest.

There are doctors who have very little aptitude for the profession. They ask for symptoms, then whip out pencil and paper and write a prescription, assuring the patient at the same time with a pleasant smile that he will come out all right.

There are doctors who pry into every case, making a business of diagnosing the cause of the trouble and doing their best to remedy it. The first cure by encouragement and sympathy, the second class by investigation and skill, and consequently they are apt to be brusque in manner.

Dr. Fordham belonged to this number. Indeed, by some he was considered brutal. Nevertheless such was the confidence in his surgical ability that he had had more patients than he wanted.

While taking his minute quantum of rest he heard some one fumbling with the knob of the door leading to the anteroom. The door opened, and there stood the ghost of a man, looking at him with great hungry eyes—a man whose clothes denoted that he belonged to the working class.

"I don't want no medicine nor operation, doctor," said the man in a trembling voice. "Don't you know me?"

"No." "I'm the man you found in the hospital the day you were hurt through it. You stopped, felt over me, fussed out me, I was very good of you, doctor, seem I hadn't a red cent."

"That's all boss," sneered the doctor. "I haven't time to be good. I remember you now. You're the man I operated on for stone."

"Yes, sir, and you made me well again."

The patient accompanied his words with a grateful look. Instead of placing the doctor it seemed to irritate him. "Suppose I did," he snarled. "Isn't that my business, making people well?"

"It may be little to you, doctor, but it's a lot to the people you relieve from sufferin', besides puttin' 'em in a fix to do somethin' again. It's made a lot of difference to me."

"Oh, most of these people I treat are able to pay me well. I work for money, the same as everybody else. That's what we all work for."

"You didn't get much money from me, doctor."

"Oh, I had to fix you up or there'd have been a bad story out about me. Half of it's for pay, the other half to avoid getting into a position to prevent our making money. It's all selfishness at bottom."

"I don't know nothin' about that. I know you made me well."

"Well, why man, you're a shadow!" "That's because I haven't had much to eat since I got out of the hospital."

"If you're well, why don't you go to work?" "I've been lookin' for work, sir, I only found o'job this mornin'."

"Well, then, why don't you go at it? I don't see what you want here."

The man opened his threadbare coat, unbuttoned a ragged waistcoat and began to fumble with his woolen shirt. Then he took a rusty knife from his trousers pocket and began to rip. The doctor watched him curiously. Presently a little gold coin fell from the shirt into the man's hand. A change might have come over the doctor's expression had he not been used to controlling it. Doctors and gamblers must screen their feelings. The man walked up to the doctor and poked the coin at him.

"I've been keepin' it for you, doctor, ever since I got out. When I left home my old mammy sewed it up in my shirt and told me never to part with it except in sickness. 'So long as you're well,' she said, 'you can work to put bread in your mouth, but when you're sick you can't. Besides, you might have to pay a doctor. They're entitled to it, and I want my son always to pay for what he gets.' I've been hungry, doctor, for a month, and I've been tempted to buy a meal with it, often, but I remembered what my old mammy said, and I remembered your kindness in relievin' me from sufferin' and puttin' me on my feet again."

The doctor, who was lying with his head resting in the palms of his hands, listened to the speech without motion or change of expression. When the man had finished he remarked, with apparent irrelevance: "By thunder!"

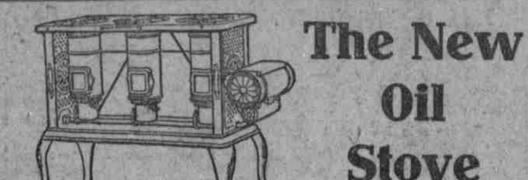

Then he arose, took the gold piece and said to the man: "I'll keep your coin as a souvenir. Come in here where I store my presents from grateful patients. There's a silver punch bowl from a millionaire, a seal ring from a wealthy widow, a diamond scarfpin from a bank president. Here, take this (handing the man the scarfpin) and this (a jewel handled paper cutter) and this (a gold snuffbox). There's not a mite of sacrifice in any one of them. Take them and sell them and go get something to eat."

"But, doctor."

"Get out of here. I'm fed and must go to lunch. If you don't, I'll fire you."

Reverend Dr. Fordham has astonished his friends by giving up his practice. They were still more astonished when it was learned that he was doing a certain amount of work each day among the poor. But his manner toward them has changed. Instead of sneering at them he speaks to them kindly and sympathetically. Everybody is wondering at the change.

The Will of Ney. Once when Marshal Ney was going into battle, looking down at his knives, which were smiling together, he said: "You may well shake. You would shake worse yet if you knew where I am going to take you."

The Uncle and the Parrot. A farmer visiting New York with his niece was induced by her to buy a parrot, which was represented to be a good talker. After the return home the young lady undertook to teach the parrot to say "uncle."

"Say uncle," she would say. "Uncle, uncle, uncle! Please say uncle." Then she would coo at the bird as if it were a baby learning to talk, and feed it and pet it, all the time begging it to say uncle. But the parrot looked bored and said nothing. This had gone on for two days, when the farmer said: "That parrot's no good. I'll put it out." Taking it to the chicken yard, the farmer grabbed the bird by the neck and slung it among the chickens, saying, "Say uncle, god darn you; say uncle!"

The farmer went to dinner, from which he was called presently by a great noise and commotion in the chicken yard, where he found seven hens dead in a corner. In the parrot's right claw was another hen, grasped firmly by the neck, and the parrot was screeching, "Say uncle, god darn you; say uncle!"

My Best Friend. Alexander Benton, who lives on Rural Route 1, Fort Edward, N. Y., says: "Dr. King's New Discovery is my best earthly friend. It cured me of asthma six years ago. It has also performed wonderful cures of incipient consumption for my son's wife. The first bottle ended the terrible cough, and this accomplished, the other symptoms left me by one, until she was perfectly well. Dr. King's New Discovery's power over coughs and colds is simply marvelous." No other remedy has ever equalled it. Fully guaranteed by the Red Cross Pharmacy, 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

First Step in Tariff Compact with Germany. Federal Council at Berlin Passes Provisional Arrangement. Berlin, May 1.—The federal council yesterday passed the German-American provisional tariff arrangement.

Quick to Learn. The Park avenue trolley line in the city of Rochester is crossed by three consecutive streets which bear masculine surnames. An Irishman with a carpenter entered one of the cars the other day and sat down gingerly near the door. Four or five other men completed the list of passengers. The car swung around the corner of Chestnut street.

"James," shouted the conductor. A man signaled him, the car stopped and the man alighted. A half minute afterward the car neared another cross street.

"William," announced the conductor.
