QUARREL ENDS IN MURDER.

A New York Tenement House the Scene of the Tragedy.

New York, May 7.—Barbardo Prizo, an Italian, was killed in the hallway of the tenement house in which he lived last evening. The police are searching for Rocco Michaeli, another Italian, accused of the killing.

According to the police story Prizo and Michaeli were intimate friends until Prizo a few weeks ago married a young woman with whom Michaeli was also in love. After the marriage it is said Michaeli continued his attentions to the young woman which caused many bitter quarrels between the two men.

Last night the story goes, Prizo's mother, who lives with him and his wife went out to purchase supplies. When she returned to the door of the flat she found Michaeli, who lives in the same building. She says he used insulting language to her and pushed her out of his way. Prizo was in the flat, heard it, and went to his mother's assistance. The two men grappled and for several minutes struggled in the presence of a score of others who lived in the same tenement. Finally, the witness says, Michaeli pushed Prizo over the banister, drew a revolver and forcing it into Prizo's mouth, fired. His then ran up on the roof, jumped to the next roof and escaped. Prizo was dead when the police arrived.

Prizo was a 30-year-old Italian, who was married to a young woman named Rosa. He had a young son, who was named Prizo. Michaeli was a 35-year-old Italian, who was married to a young woman named Maria. He had a young son, who was named Michaeli.

She was waving them farewell when suddenly the harness broke and the horse, a wild and unmanageable animal, with a bad reputation from former runaways bolted down the hill. The daughter could only look on as the horse and wagon dashed down the hill and crashed into the fence, where Mrs. Morse was fatally injured and Mr. Morse so severely injured that he will not be able to leave the hospital for some time to come.

WHAT ABOUT THIS BILL?

K. A. Lane Would Collect For Work Done by A. B. Lane

SAY TWO OF ALDERMEN

A. B. Took Job to Repair Blackwell Street Hose House, But as City Auditor He Cannot Collect Under His Own Ruling.

If Adolph B. Lane took the job and did the work of making repairs to the Blackwell street hose house, how is it that Karl A. Lane is trying to collect for the same? And why was the bill of K. A. Lane's carried away by one of last year's aldermen before action had been taken on it by the board, and why was it never returned?

These were some of the questions that were raised at last evening's meeting of the city council, and which Aldermen Cutler and Thurston, members of last year's board, tried to explain. The questions began on the presentation of a statement from K. A. Lane that $136.68 was due him for work done for the city. The statement did not tell what, when or where the work was done, and the first question asked was what the bill was for. One alderman suggested that it must be for work on the Blackwell street hose house, which caused Alderman Ladd to ask who let the contract. Alderman Cutler, a member of the first year committee, though not chairman last year, explained that he understood the job was let to Adolph B. Lane, though he did not know as any contract had been drawn up. He said ex-Alderman Milne was chairman of the committee at that time and that he had attended to giving out the work. Whenever he had seen Adolph B. Lane during the progress of the work he had always been referred to Adolph Lane as the man in charge, and he did not believe Karl Lane ever did a stroke of work on the repairs. Alderman Thurston explained how the bill first came before the finance committee and also disappeared. He stated that Alderman Cutler had appeared before the committee and objected to its payment to K. A. Lane, as he had not done the work, that Adolph B. Lane, who did it, was a member of the board of city auditors, and that they had criticized him (Cutler) for letting teams to the city contrary to the provisions of the city charter, and now Lane—who had violated the charter in the same way was trying to get around it by having his brother try to collect the bill.
