Secretary Tall lines up with President Roosevelt in the "facese" class, and the detractors of the Panama canal are his especial target.

We read that the government is making preparations to complete the cornice to the Burlington post office building, which has been under construction for four or five years. This begins to look as if the deed to the Barre federal site might be passed within the next decade.

The efforts of the Gentlemen's Driving club of this city for a revival of horse racing in Barre have been very successful insofar as large entries for the meet Thursday and Friday of this week are concerned. They have lists of horses which ought to furnish some excellent sport for the two days. There will be in addition, extra attractions to please the people. What will appeal to all is the intention of the club management to run a clean meet all the way through. To this end they have barred everything of an objectionable nature. With favorable weather there should, therefore, be a large attendance on both days of the meet.

"UNWRITTEN LAW" AGAIN SCORES

Again the Virginians have placed the sanctity of the home above the sacredness of human life and a jury allowed Judge Loving to go scot-free after killing a young man who is said to have invaded his home. Not all Virginians feel the same, however, for the defense had to get a change of venue, not being confident in placing the case with the local court. Another indication that the Virginians are not one-minded in the matter is the inference in the press report that there might be a hostile demonstration when Judge Loving returned to his home town. Of course, this latter intimation does not speak well for the self-control of the people, but it indicates that sympathies do not rest entirely with the acquitted man. This Loving discharge is the second one to be made in Virginia on a similar plea, the "unwritten law," within a few months. The defense was copied almost point for point from that notorious example, the Thaw defense. What is more heinous about this latter case is that we still have it with us and necessarily must go through it again. Criminal lawyers will have learned well their primer in defense of murder cases by the time the Thaw case is again finishing. In view of these two successful defenses in Virginia and a disagreement in the New York case the "unwritten law" seems to be taking its place in legal practice in spite of a vigorous opposition.

JINGLES AND JESTS

Pleasure.

Tell me, dear reader, are you one of those that think it is fun to buy a little stack of chips. Put a cigar between your lips and play and play and play and play until the night has merged to day—To wake until Alfred's blub. In vain attempts to fill a flush—To chip away your precious hoard At something you cannot afford? And can you find true pleasure in that drawing, drawing and infir. In that enjoyment to be found in quitting with "another round"? All this and worse—oh, are you one that thinks such foolishness is fun—To fool away 'till 'em're night? You're? Dear reader, you are right—Puck.

Not Fond Thoughts.

VERSATILE ARTISTS.

Kenyon Cox is to take up the work of sculpture for a time in place of painting.

A. P. Minter Proctor, the sculptor, is a painter of ability, and his studies of wild animals are considered to rank among the highest in this field.

In the latter years of his life, when his eyesight had failed him, Gerome took up the sculptor's tools and modeled animals with marked success.

MacMonnies a few years ago dropped sculpture entirely for awhile and won a decided success in Paris as a portrait painter and a "figure man," though his work in the latter field never was liked in this country owing to the strain of coarseness in his work.

Fred Remington produces almost as many sculptures nowadays as he does paintings, and he has met with the reward of having three of his bronzes in the permanent collection of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, though as yet none of his paintings is in that institution.—New York Press.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

If you wish to obtain a high luster on your kitchen range mix your stove polish with very strong soapuds. When trimming lamps use a pair of old manure scissors. They round out the ends of the wick and prevent it from smoking.

If you wish your brooms to last don't stand them in the corner in the usual manner. Hang them up by their handles or turn them upside down.

A rusty grate cannot be satisfactorily cleaned in one day, so take two days about it. Put on the blacklead thickly one day and leave it to dry. The next day polish it off, and you will find it has destroyed the rust, which comes off with it.

THE CHANCE CAME.

Dan's Father Said He Never Would Set the River on Fire.

Several years before the discovery of oil at Pithole an Irishman named McCarthy and his son Dan came to this country from the Emerald Isle. Dan was a young man of twenty, but his father looked upon him as a mere boy and seemed to take delight in ridiculing him before people.

"'Tis, Dan is a good by," he would say sarcastically, "but, Danny, me by, you'll never set the river on fire."

This was his stock witicism, and it annoyed Dan very much, but he did his best and soon surprised the old gentleman by securing a lucrative job. "Tis, Danny has a job all right," he said. "It's $1.50 a day, but the by'll alive set the river on fire—not he."

When oil was found at Pithole, Dan hurried to the scene and was soon earning unusually large wages as a teamster. All the petroleum was drawn in barrels, and teams were in great demand. He saved his money, bought an acre of land and soon had a well drilled that was producing 100 barrels of oil per day at $10 per barrel.

The elder McCarthy joined him, saw the well, received a liberal gift of money and then took his head ominously. "'Tis a good thing, Danny," he croaked, "ye're doin' well; but, mark me worruds, ye'll never set the river on fire, me by."

A few days later a flood wrecked one of Dan's small wooden tanks, the oil broke out the river, and there was great excitement. As Dan and his father stood on the bank watching the oil float away Dan drew a match and lighted it.

"Father," he said coolly, "the next time ye see O'ill never set the river on fire please remember that O' had a chance wanst, and—didn't do it, bedad."

Then he blew out the match.

STRANGER THAN FICTION.

The Tragedy in the Life of a Russian Military Officer.

Lieutenant von Lemsberg of the Russian guards endured thirty-one years of penal exile and penal service in Siberia. He was in his day a fine looking and highly accomplished officer. Like many of his fellows, he borrowed money from City Councilor Wlassow, an old, good natured bachelor. Young von Lemsberg's notes continued to grow, and the old money lender threatened to sue unless some of them were redeemed. Then the young lieutenant became engaged to the daughter of Count Tolstien and called on Wlassow to tell him the news and to ask for time. "You wait," said he, in a sneering way. "I'll give you a wedding present to be remembered." Believing this to have been a threat, the lieutenant called at the house the next day and deliberately cut his throat. He opened the old man's desk to find his promissory notes and discovered them neatly tied up, marked "Paid" and a document by which he would have become the heir of the man he had murdered. Overcome by remorse he surrendered to the authorities and was sentenced to life servitude in Siberia. Because of good conduct his irons were taken off after seven years, he married a woman who went into voluntary exile to be near a relative, started a vegetable shop in the penal settlement which grew until it became a great mercantile establishment, and when the war with Japan broke out he volunteered, became an officer, was decorated for bravery and received a full pardon.

A Social Catastrophe.
