A cocktail standing between Fairbanks and the presidency? Never.

There is a deal of difference between pasteurized milk and pasteurized milk.

Sir Thomas of tub and tea fame refuses to let America humble him again.

Philadelphia is much like the American woods now that the Elks have disappeared.

The interchange between Vermont pulpits and western college presidencies continues at intervals.

A "flare-back" is now said to have caused the explosion on the battleship Georgia the first of the week. Human flare backs are explosions in themselves.

The Burlington Clipper thinks that "with good honest management there is no reason why Barre should not certainly hold successful horse races." Certainly.

It is only natural that some of the old-timers in railroad service should find it difficult to get accustomed to weekly pay slips rather than monthly. Anything new throws them off the track for a time.

Not content with having married one titled spendthrift, Anna Gould is said to be engaged to another even worse. Now that might really be called a "brain storm."

It was a startling record of heat prostrations which Philadelphia offered yesterday. A total of 4,430. For once the sleepy city beat its bigger neighbor, New York, all hollow.

As between an imbecile, dissolute man and a mere slip of a boy, eleven years old, Korea seems to be on three horns of a dilemma for an emperor with a fourth horn in the shape of the mikado of Japan possible in any event.

The trolley accident at Portland, Me., in which two cars collided when the motorman of the rear car could not distinguish the car ahead because of the dimness of the lights, suggests the possibility of a similar accident on any line which is thus troubled with scant power. It is often noticed on local cars that at times the shortage of power makes it impossible from the trailing car to distinguish the car ahead. There is little likelihood that a similar accident to the one in Portland will occur here, but the conditions point out to the men in charge of the cars the necessity for careful running on such occasions.

WORK FOR ARBITRATION BOARD.

The two strikes now on in Vermont are hard nuts to crack, if we are to judge by the length of them. Yet it seems that the slate industry at Fair Haven and the paper industry at Belows Falls could better afford to have a little conciliatory action on each side to the dispute. The paper strike has now completed its sixth week, with no apparent change except a vague promise of settlement through a conference in New York next week. The slate workers have been out two months or more. Now if Vermont had an arbitration board similar to the commission in Massachusetts there might be a grand work for it in these two cases. There is nothing obligatory about first referring the dispute to arbitration, but on application of both sides the board takes up the matter, calling in witnesses who are familiar with the particular strike and hearing from both sides the points at issue. Then the board gives its decision. It is said that the verdict is rarely questioned. The two long drawn out strikes in Vermont give ample reason for demanding a state arbitration board whose efforts, however, should not be allowed to interfere with any existing conciliation boards.

A GOOD SUGGESTION.

We are indebted to the excellent little leaflet published quarterly by the Vermont library commission for a valuable suggestion for local application. "The Bulletin" suggests to its readers that they make exhibits of something that is manufactured in their town, showing the varied stages of the product. It is a valuable hint and one which should be followed out by every town and city that has an industry.

Here is Barre, for instance, the largest monumental granite center and with the most extensive quarries, having no public collection of her granites, so far as we are aware. Each quarrying firm, of course, has samples of its own stock for private business purposes to show to prospective customers. But there is no general collection of the various grades and colors, nor exhibits of the different stages of development from the rough stock into the finished product. In some public building—perhaps the new library—there ought to be such a collection to be shown the visitors to the city. The collection should contain all the different shades from the very light to the very dark. Then there should also be samples in the rough, specimens of hammered work, glistening surfaces of beautifully polished stone, rock-faced work and, in fact, all the various stages of development.

This idea would hardly suggest itself to the people of Barre because they are so familiar with the aspects of the stone that the novelty would not appeal to them. Nevertheless, to visitors to the city (and there are large numbers of them each year) it would be something novel and likewise interesting to have the various specimens of granite where they can be inspected at close range and handled. The advertising virtue of the idea will also be apparent to the dealers in the stone. Let some one or several of the organizations of the city take up this matter and arrange to have a collection prepared. No doubt the manufacturers and quarry owners would be pleased to donate specimens. They recently went to considerable expense to show their wares at the St. Louis exposition and realized much benefit from it. From this local advertising they would also receive indirect benefit and at no expense save that of working the specimens into the stages required.

SLUMS NEGLECTED

HERE, SHE SAYS.
Best Preachers, Best Music, Finest Halls in England For The Poorer Classes.

Chicago, Ill., July 20.—"In England the best preachers go into the slums," said Miss Mary J. Hepburn of Leeds, England, in a talk at the Desplaines campmeeting of the Methodist Episcopal church, yesterday.

"In the country," she continued, "almost anything will do for the poorer classes. The English furnish the best music and provide the finest halls for the work among the people with the fewest advantages, where, of course, it is most needed."

Miss Hepburn's address was part of a special deaconesses' meeting.

HAS HAD GOOD LUCK.

Father of 10 Calls Roll at Meal Time.

New York, July 20.—"Roll call," says the head of the Marsullo house when he takes his place at head of the table at dinner. Then, like the first sergeant of a military company, the names of his children are called—19 of them.

From one standpoint, at least, Dominick Marsullo is the one really "desirable citizen" in New York.

"I came to America from Italy when I was 12 years of age," he said, "and you can see that I've had good luck."

He thinks he is a candidate for presidential favor. His friends think so, too.

Who Will Claim Them?
