NEW ENGLAND LOYAL

Well Represented in the Colonial Displays at Jamestown

MEMENTOS OF EARLY DAYS

Priceless Objects of Historical Interest from Each of States Which Have Buildings at Fair—Relics Housed in a Fireproof Structure.

The states of Puritan New England, which as colonies battled side by side with their sister colony of Cavalier Virginia in the defense of their common principles, have entered with intense interest in the great celebration of the three hundredth anniversary of the settlement at Jamestown.

Rhode Island. The historical collection from Rhode Island consists of valuable old documents of all kinds, pictures and other links of connection between past and present. An old, faded parchment, dated in 1637, contains a request of the settlers to inhabit the "towne of Providence." This strange document was signed by thirteen settlers. "The confirmation deed" of Roger Williams and a letter from Oliver Cromwell to the colony of Rhode Island are among the interesting papers shown here; also many old records of great historical value pertaining to the troubles which for several years prior to the Revolution were brewing and which finally led to the rupture between Great Britain and the American colonies. The exhibit is one of the finest in the United States relating to the colonial times.

Of all the states having buildings at the exposition Rhode Island, the smallest in the Union, was the first to break ground, and the Rhode Island building was the first to be completed. It is one of the prettiest of the state buildings, and the historical exhibit is most creditable.

The Rhode Island commissioners at the Jamestown exposition are: Hon. John T. Blodgett, president, Providence; William P. Sheffield, Jr., treasurer, Newport; Dennis P. Sheehan, Providence; George N. Kingsbury, Providence; George P. Burchinal, Woonsocket; and Joseph P. Burlington, Providence. The entire commission has been very active in the work of preparing the Rhode Island building and exhibits. The work has been done well and faithfully.

Rhode Island is by no means behind her sister states in her exhibits. The display that she will have on her state day, which will be on the anniversary of the battle of Lake Erie, Tuesday, Sept. 10, is sure to be deeply admired. The orator of the day on that occasion will be President W. H. P. Faunce of Brown university.

Connecticut. Connecticut has one of the handsomest state buildings at the Jamestown exposition, beautifully located on the shores of Hampton Roads. Its exhibit in the States Exhibits Palace is also well worthy of comment. The Connecticut building was constructed after the general plan of the old Talmage home at Litchfield, the architecture being closely followed, with the interior somewhat changed to conform to modern ideas and conveniences.

The historical features of the Connecticut building are not confined to the house alone, for its walls contain many articles of historical value. Here is preserved the celebrated "condemnation tablet," consisting of the Connecticut coat of arms, beneath which are the words "Connecticut State." On both sides of this tablet are quotations from famous writers and historians who played prominent parts in American history.

The walls of the great entrance hall of the Connecticut building are finished in soft old venetian red. The hall furniture is of the seventeenth century. A quaint old grandfather's clock occupies a place of prominence on the stairway landing. The upper hall contains a pretty wing chair of Hepplewhite design, a scroll top corner cupboard filled with rare old china and a scroll top highboy with claw and ball feet, the last named being one of the most exquisite articles in this collection of antiques.

Connecticut's historical exhibit is like-wise elaborate and interesting, and its industrial and agricultural exhibit in the States Exhibit Palace contains much of human interest and useful information.

A handsome display of Connecticut clocks is another attractive feature. Clocks of every size, date and design may be seen. Other interesting exhibits from the factories and shops of Connecticut are shown. The public schools of the state are represented by a carefully prepared exhibit, showing the methods adopted in the education of the children of Connecticut. Yale university, one of the most famous educational institutions in the world, has a fine showing in the Connecticut space in the States Exhibit Palace. Other schools and colleges are represented, the educational feature being prominent throughout.

Connecticut has a very fine display of corn, clover grasses of all kinds, apples, cranberries, tobacco and dairy products. Many manufacturing industries are represented. The busy little commonwealth makes a showing both in the way of building and exhibits that would do credit to any state in the Union.

The Connecticut department of insurance also has a neat building at the exposition.

Connecticut day is Oct. 10.

New Hampshire. A replica of the famous old Langdon mansion of Portsmouth, N. H., has been constructed at the exposition to serve as the New Hampshire State building. The Langdon mansion was one of the most attractive colonial homes of the early days of America's struggle for the establishment of an independent government. This mansion was built in 1784 by Governor Langdon and has remained in the Langdon family ever since, being owned at this time by Woodbury Langdon of New York, who makes it his summer home.

The builder of this interesting old homestead was one of the heroes of the American Revolution and a man of great prominence in New England's early days. He was the first United States senator from New Hampshire and was the first president pro tem. of the United States senate.

Many anecdotes of Governor Lang-don's fame as a statesman and bravery as a Revolutionary hero have been recalled since the Jamestown arrangement was decided upon, among them the expedition to Fort William and Mary in which Governor Langdon and General Sullivan and others brought away gunpowder which two years later was used at the battle of Bunker Hill.

The New Hampshire Colonial Dames have contributed a valuable collection of old pottery, colonial furniture and a handsome traveling case of solid mahogany, filled with cut glass, glasses and bottles which were owned by Colonel Cilley before the Revolution. In this collection is an exquisite miniature of Brigadier General Enoch Poor of Revolutionary fame; also some rare old lace, fans, manuscripts and prints.

Massachusetts. An imposing replica of the old state house at Boston represents the commonwealth of Massachusetts at the Jamestown exposition. That famous old structure, whose reproduction graces the row of state buildings, presents a pretty picture of the water front overlooking the placid waters of Hampton Roads. The selection of this historic old statehouse for the Massachusetts building gives to the outside world an opportunity to see one of the public buildings which have played a most important part in throwing off the yoke of allegiance to the American colonies to the British crown. Within the walls of the old Boston statehouse were heard some of the first demands for American liberty. There were taken some of the first steps that led to the Declaration of Independence.

The Massachusetts participation is historical and educational, no agricultural or mineral exhibits having been made by the old Bay State. The state building and the interesting things which it contains and the educational exhibit in the Palace of Education give to Massachusetts such a distinguished representation that no additional features were deemed necessary.

The Massachusetts commission consists of H. L. Higginson of Boston, president; Francis H. Appleton of Peabody, executive commissioner; Arthur H. Lord of Plymouth, finance and legal commissioner; Mrs. Edith Greenough Wendell of Boston, recording secretary; William H. Fairbanks of Warren, commissioner; Willie A. Murphy of Boston, secretary.

Massachusetts day at the exposition will be Sept. 5, but Massachusetts is represented daily by many of its people. Among the great events booked for the exposition is the meeting of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company of Boston, one of the most famous military organizations in the world, whose history dates back to old colonial days.

It is about time to plan for potato digging. Will we do it by hand this year, or buy one of the modern machines? I have on hand the Hallock O. E. Digger and the "Iron Age." One costs $75.00, the other $115.00. As soon as the potatoes are fit, I am going to have a public trial of these diggers on my early potatoes, at Sunnyside Farm, and shall buy and afterwards keep on sale the one doing the best work. I want every potato grower in this section to see this trial and help me decide on the merits of the machines. Will give notice in this space a day or two before the trial begins.
