The Barre & Montpelier street railway company has built just outside of Dewey park on private property, a small cottage 18 by 24, with quaint sides and roof covered with bark, with floor for dancing, and an attic. The cottage promises to be a pleasant place of private parties, such as corn roasts, winter evening dances, snow shoe club climbs and the like. It is removed far enough so as to insure privacy and still be near to the electric road, and it will be conducted by the electric road so that parties using it will have the sole occupancy. It is in the nature of a "shack," and while being on private ground will be accessible to responsible persons. The roof comes down over the sides so as to afford an eight-foot porch with turf bottom.
