Farm, Field and Garden

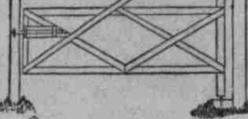

FARM GATE.

It Swings Lightly, Without Sagging, if Properly Built.

The principle of hinge hanging may not be new, but I have never seen another of such light skeleton build as our nonsagging cattle gate shown in the drawing. The material used for its construction is generally to be found on every farm, so that all the usual necessary expense is that of having the blacksmith make the hook and eye hinge for the top of the gate, the lower hinge being merely an iron pin inserted in an upright end piece and set into a block at the base of the post, making the cost of construction very light.

The top and bottom boards are 1 by 6 inches and sixteen feet long. The hinge end upright is 4 by 4 inches and ten feet long, and the latch end is 3 by 4 inches and four and one-half feet long. The braces are all of 1 by 6 inch stuff.

When this gate is intended to turn other stock than cattle and horses either woven or barbed wire, the former preferable, is stretched over the frame tightly and secured with staples. To hang the gate bore a hole in the bottom of the hinge end upright and drive in a three-fourths or one inch iron pin that when set will project about four inches from the bottom. This is inserted into the block shown at the ground line spiked to the post, first screwing or spiking on an iron plate, with hole to match size of pin, to prevent wear and working loose. A similar plate should also be fastened to bottom of upright for the same purpose.

The top hinge is made of a three-fourths inch rod, one end a hook, the other an eyebolt, with threaded ends, explains a writer in Farm and Fireside. Nail a substantial brace on the top of the gatepost and to a post set solidly in the ground in line with the fence (or a heavy twisted wire will serve the same purpose) to hold the post firm against weight of gate, and it will swing lightly and easily, remaining for years without sagging, provided the post is properly set.

Snow For Poultry.

The possibility of lessening the labor of caring for poultry by supplying snow instead of water has been studied at the Connecticut Storrs Experiment station by C. K. Graham. When pullets and hens were fed wheat screenings and beef scrap from hoppers in colony houses on low ground frozen during most of the experimental period and covered with snow during part of the time the old hens did not furnish as many eggs or appear to be in as good condition as the younger birds.

The old hens were apparently affected by the snow, the egg production being smaller on the days when snow was on the ground and also considerably less when the ground was frozen—that is, on the cold days when water was not accessible. These conditions do not seem to have affected the younger birds, and they show an increase in eggs immediately after each snowstorm, gradually dropping back as the snow disappears.

In the case of other lots kept under much the same conditions in houses on higher and drier ground the cold weather did not affect the egg production materially, "but there was a noticeable increase in the amount of grain eaten during the cold weeks when comparison is made with the very mild ones. This, however, may have been caused by the birds foraging more during the milder periods. These birds did not appear to mind the cold, and there was not the slightest sign of frosted combs among them, nor were there any colds."

Texas Grows Oranges.

Southwest and southern Texas is this year entering for the first time into the orange market of the country, says a writer in Farm and Ranch. Satsuma oranges are being shipped in quantities and are yielding big returns. The Satsuma is grafted upon the Citrus trifoliata, originally imported from Japan and used as hedges. This tree, being deciduous, makes the fall of sap in cold weather overcome the danger from frost which the orange tree as an evergreen otherwise suffers. Satsuma oranges have been grown successfully in a latitude fifty miles north of San Antonio. Groves are being planted over this section, and southwest Texas is preparing to compete with California and Florida in the orange business.

Keep the Teams at Work.

There can be little doubt that deeper plowing will not only lessen the tendency of southern soils to wash, but that it will increase their general productive capacity. Bearing in mind these factors, pay no heed to those who say do not plow in the winter, but whenever the land is dry enough keep the teams at work, plowing and also subsoiling when the subsoil is a good clay or the land has a hardpan subsoil. Turn in all the vegetable matter which has been produced on the land. Do not burn anything which will make humus. Land so treated can be fitted quickly for crops in the spring by the use of the disk or cutaway harrow.—Southern Planter.
